Cave at Banias.

the plain and city. It is enclosed by walls of immense strength and thickness, and must have been an almost impregnable fortress. It is of Saracenic architecture; but many of the fine bevelled stones with which the noble round towers are constructed must have belonged to a far more ancient edifice. This castle received the name of es-Subeibeh about the time of the Crusades, perhaps from the half-gipsy Arab tribe of the same name that still inhabit the vicinity. A short distance east of the castle there is a very ancient ruin, surrounded by a thick grove of venerable oaks. There are also ruins west of Banias, consisting of columns, capitals, and foundations of buildings, together with canals that formerly conveyed the water of the brook, now crossed by a stone bridge. Above the fountain are Greek inscriptions in the rock, confirming the testimony of Josephus that Agrippa adorned Banias with royal liberality, and also sustaining the ancient statements that the fountain was held sacred to Pan (Biblioth. Sacra, 1846, p. 194). See Reland, Palæst. p. 918 sq.; Eckhel, Doctr. Num. iii, 339 sq.; Burckhardt, Syria, p. 37 sq.; Buckingham, ii, 314 sq.; Thomson, Land and Book, i, 344 sq.; Schwarz, Palest. p. 144; Mod. Traveller, p. 327 sq., Am. ed.; Raumer, Palästina, p. 215; Wilson, Lands of Bible, ii, 175 sq.; Porter, Damascus, i, 307 sq.

Cæsarius, St., of Arles, was born in 469 at Chalons-sur-Saône. He early developed monkish tendencies, and privately withdrew from his parents to the monastery of Lerins, where he was appointed to the office of cellarer. Afterward, falling ill from extreme asceticism, he was obliged to remove to Arles, and was beloved by Eonius the bishop, whom, in 502, he succeeded in the see of Arles. He died in 542, leaving many homilies, containing evidence of much piety combined with great superstition. A volume of them was edited by Stephen Baluze (Paris, 1669, 8vo). The others are given in the Biblioth. Patrum, viii, 819, 860, and xxvii, 324. His Regula Monachorum (contained in Holstenii Codex Regul. Monast. Rome, 1661) was adopted by many convents, and often used by the founders of orders. Monks and nuns of St. Cæsarius existed until the rule of Benedict was generally adopted. A graphic sketch of his life and labors is given by Neander, Light in Dark Places, p. 50.—Mosheim, Ch. Hist. i, 164, 166; Neander, Ch. Hist. ii, 261, 304, 550; Cave, Hist. Lit. anno 502.

Cæsarius of Heisterbach, a preacher and historian of note, in 1199 became a Cistercian monk in the monastery of Heisterbach, in the diocese of Cologne. He became eventually prior of the convent of the Valley of St. Peter, near Bonn. He lived until the year 1227, but when he died is unknown. His writings are, 1. De miraculis et visionibus sui temporis (chiefly in Germany, Cologne, 1591, 8vo); the first edition is without name of place or date:—2. Vita S. Engelberti archiep. Colon. (Cologne, 1633, and in Surius, November 7th):—3. Homilia, edited under the title of Fasciculi Moralitatis, by Coppenstein (Cologne, 1615):—4. Catalogus Episcoporum Coloniensium, published, with a continuation by another author, in vol. ii of the Fontes Rerum German. (1845):—5. An inedited Vita S. Elizabethæ is preserved among the manuscripts of the library of Brussels. Many of his sermons are highly praised for their evangelical tone, as well as for their eloquence. His De Miraculis affords a graphic picture of the state of his times. See Kauffmann, Cæsarius v. Heisterbach (Köln, 1850); Cave, Hist. Lit. anno 1225; Herzog, Real-Encyklop. ii, 490.

Cæsarius of Nazianzus, a younger brother of Gregory Nazianzen, was educated first at Alexandria, whence he proceeded to Constantinople, where he obtained high honors, resisted the attempts of the Emperor Julian to win him from the faith, and died under Valens in 368. He was distinguished for his proficiency in physics and mathematics. Gregory delivered his funeral sermon (Oratio funebris in laudem Cæsarii fratris, Or. viii), in which his piety and devotion are lauded. According to Suidas, he wrote contra Gentes, and four Dialogues are given as his in the Latin editions of St. Gregory and in the Bibliothecæ Patrum. —Ullmann, Life of Gregory, p. 132; Cave, Hist. Lit. anno 362.

age of seventeen he went to the University of Utrecht, where he was placed under the tuition of the distinguished professors De Vries and Grævius. In 1691, when Principal Carstairs was sent to Holland in quest of a gentleman to fill a professor's chair in the University of Edinburgh, he applied to Calamy, and pressed him to accept the situation; but he declined the honor, though soon afterward he returned to England for the purpose of pursuing his studies in the Bodleian Library. In 1700 he began to preach among the Nonconformists, and in 1703 he took charge of a congregation in Westminster, which he held for many years. In 1703 he arranged for the press Baxter's Life and Times, which publication gave rise to a dispute between Calamy and Hoadley. In 1709 he was made D.D. by the universities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen. After a laborious life, divided between preaching and writing, he died, June 3, 1732. Among his works are Discourses on Inspiration (Lond. 1710, 8vo):—Sermons on the Trinity (Lond. 1722, 8vo):—Defense of moderate Non-conformity (Lond. 1703–5, 3 vols. 8vo):—The Non-conformist's Memorial (Lond. 1721, 2 vols. 8vo):—History of his Life and Times, edited by Rutt (Lond. 1829, 2 vols. 8vo).—Jones, *Christ. Calas, JEAN, an unfortunate merchant of Toulouse, of the Protestant religion. His son, Marc Antoine, hung himself in a fit of melancholy Oct. 13, 1761. The father was seized as guilty of the murder, on the ground that his son intended to embrace Romanism the next day. No proof could be offered against him, but the fanatical passion of the mob was roused. The corpse was honored as that of a martyr. "The clergy exerted all their influence to confirm the populace in their delusion. At Toulouse the White Penitents celebrated with great solemnity the funeral of the young man, and the Dominican monks erected a scaffold and placed upon it a skeleton, holding in one hand a wreath of palms, and in the other an abjuration of Protestantism. The family of Calas was, in consequence of the popular excitement, brought to trial for the murder, and several deluded and (most probably) some bribed witnesses appeared against them. A Catholic servant-maid, and the young man Lavaysse, were also implicated in the accusation. Calas, in his defence, insisted on his uniform kindness to all his children; reminded the court that he had not only allowed another of his sons to become a Catholic, but had also paid an annual sum for his maintenance since his conversion. He also argued from his own infirmity that he could not have prevailed over a strong young man, and referred to the well-known melancholy moods of the deceased as likely to lead to suicide; and, lastly, he pointed out the improbability that the Catholic servant-maid would assist in such a murder. But all his arguments proved unavailing, and the Parliament of Toulouse sentenced the wretched man—by a majority of eight against five—to torture and death on the wheel! With great firmness, and protestations of his innocence to the last, the old man died on the wheel, March 9, 1762. His property was confiscated. His youngest son was banished for life from France, but was captured by the monks, and compelled to abjure Protestantism. The daughters were sent to a convent" (Chambers, s. v.). The family of the unhappy man retired to Geneva, and Voltaire subsequently undertook to defend his memory. He succeeded in drawing public attention toward the circumstances of the case, and a revision of the trial was granted. Fifty judges once more examined the facts, and on March 9, 1765, the Parliament of Paris declared Calas altogether innocent. Louis XV ordered the property of Calas to be restored to his family, and made to the latter a present of 30,000 livres. The investigation at last led to the toleration edict of Louis XVI in 1787.—Bungener, Priest and Huguenot, vol. ii; Coquerel, Histoire des Églises du Désert (2 vols. Calasanza, GIUSEPPE (Josephus a matre Dei), founder of the order of the Piarists (q. v.), was born in Aragon in 1556. He entered holy orders in 1582, and went to Rome, where he obtained the protection of Clement VIII, Paul V, and Gregory XV, the latter of whom, after the new order had been founded by Calasanza, named him general of it in 1622. He died in 1648, and was canonized in 1767. He is commemorated on August 27.—Fehr, Geschichte d. Mönchsorden, ii, 51.

Calasio, MARIO DI, named from a village of that name in the Abruzzo, where he was born in 1550. He became a Franciscan, and devoted himself to Hebrew, in which he soon became so great a proficient that Pope Paul V made him D.D. and professor of Hebrew at Rome. He is best known by his Hebrew Concordance, which occupied him during forty years, even with the aid of other learned men. He was about to commit this work to the press, when he died, in 1620. It appeared under the title Concordantiæ Sacrarum Bibliorum Hebraicæ cum convenientiis ling. Arab. et Syr. (Rome, 1621, 4 vols. fol.). Another edition was published by Romaine at London in 1747, but it is not considered so accurate as that of 1621. He is said to have died chanting the Psalms in Hebrew.—Biog. Univ. vi, 504.

Calatrava, a military order of Spain, named from the town of Calatrava, in New Castile. It had its origin in the following circumstances: When Alphonso, the father of Sanchez III, had taken the town of Calatrava, in 1147, from the Moors, he gave it to the Templars to defend; but when it was spread abroad in 1158 that the Arabs were about to attempt the recapture of the place, the Templars resigned it again to Sanchez, who thereupon presented it to Raymond, abbot of the Cistercian monastery of St. Mary. The Arabs, after all, did not attempt the place; but many of the warriors who had been drawn together for its defence (as well as many of the lay brethren of the convent) entered the Cistercian order, but under a habit more fit for military exercises than for those of monks. They were designated as the order of Calatrava. It was approved by Pope Alexander 1164, and confirmed by Gregory VIII 1187. The knights at first wore a white scapulary and hood, but in 1397 the Anti-pope Benedict XIII permitted them a secular dress, distinguished by a red cross fleur-de-lisée. In 1486, Ferdinand and Isabella obtained a bull from Pope Innocentius VIII, which reserved the nomination of the grand master to the pope. Adrian VI, however, annexed the grand mastership of this order to the crown of Spain. The knights made a vow of obedience, poverty, and conjugal chastity (for they were permitted to marry once), and were bound to maintain the immaculate conception of the Blessed Virgin. As a monastic order the institution has ceased to exist, but there are now said to be nearly eighty commanderies and priories in Spain, generally given as rewards of merit to political favorites. Since 1219 the order had also nuns, who had to prove, before being admitted, their descent from noble houses. They wore the dress of the Cistercian nuns, and their principal monastery was at Almagro. They are now likewise secularized.—Helyot, Ordres Relig. vol. i; Landon, Eccl. Dict. s. v.

Calcutta, the capital of Bengal, and an episcopal see of the Church of England, on the Hoogly. The bishopric was erected in 1814, and the bishop is metropolitan of India. The incumbents have been, 1. Thomas Fanshaw Middleton, May 8, 1814; 2. Reginald Heber, June 1, 1823; 3. John T. James, June 4, 1827; 4. J. Matthias Turner, May 17, 1829; 5. Daniel Wilson, April 29, 1832, died 1858, who commenced the building of a cathedral church, and the foundation of a chapter; 6. George Edward Lynch Cotton, D.D., consecrated 1858; 7. Robert Milman, February 2, 1867. Calcutta has also been the centre of an important system of Protestant missions, both English and American. See INDIA.

Calderwood, DAVID, a Scotch divine, was born in 1575, and in 1604 became minister of the parish of Crealing. When James I in 1617 sought to bring the Scottish Church into conformity with the Church of England, Calderwood was strenuous in opposition. Persecution and threats having failed to shake Calderwood, he was imprisoned, and afterward banished. He retired to Holland, where he published Altare Damascenum seu ecclesiæ Anglicanæ politia, etc. (L. Bat. 1623, best ed. 1708, 4to), in which he enters into a full examination of the principles of the Church of England, its government, ceremonies, and connection with the state. The work made a great impression at the time, and was translated into English under the title of The Altar of Damascus, or the Pattern of the English Hierarchy and Church obtruded upon the Church of Scotland (1621, 12mo). A report having been spread that Calderwood was dead, a man named Patrick Scot published a pretended recantation, with the title "Calderwood's Recantation, directed to such in Scotland as refuse Conformity to the Ordinances of the Church" (London, 1622). Calderwood, in the mean time, had returned secretly to Scotland, where he lived some years in concealment. He collected the materials for a History of the Kirk of Scotland, which he left in MS., and which has been published by the Woodrow Society (Edinb. 1842-9, 8 vols. 8vo). From the materials of this work Calderwood wrote his True History of the Church of Scotland from the Beginning of the Reformation unto the End of the Reign of James VI (1678, fol.). He died about 1650.—English Cyclopædia.

Caldron, prop. a large cooking vessel, is the rendering in certain passages of the Auth. Vers. for the following words: 1. אֲגַמּוֹן, agmon' (Job xli, 20 [12]), a heated kettle, others a burning reed ("rush" elsewhere); 2. דּוּד, dud (2 Chron. xxxv, 13; "pot," Job xli, 20 [12]; Psa. lxxxi, 6; "kettle," 1 Sam. ii, 14), a large boiler (also a "basket"); 3. סִיר, sir (Jer. lii, 18, 19; Ezek. xi, 3, 7, 11, elsewhere "pot"), the most general term for a kettle or basin (also a "thorn"); 4. קַלַּחַת, kallach'ath (1 Sam. ii, 14; Mic. iii, 3), a pan or pot (so called from pouring); 5. λέβης (2 Macc. vii, 3), a kettle, in this case a large caldron for torture. Metallic vessels of this description have been obtained from the ruins of Egypt, and still more lately two copper caldrons were discovered by Mr. Layard among the excavations at Nimroud (Nin. and Bab. p. 149 sq.), about 2½ feet in diameter, and 3 feet deep, resting upon a stand of brick work, with their mouths closed by large tiles, and containing a variety of smaller bronze objects. See POT.

Caldwell, David, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in Lancaster county, Pa., March 22, 1725, graduated at Princeton in 1761, and was licensed to preach by the New Brunswick Presbytery in 1763. Being ordained in 1765, he became pastor of the congregations of Buffalo and Alamance, N. C., in 1768. In 1776 he was a member of the Convention which formed the State Constitution, and some years later he declined the offer of the presidency of the University of North Carolina, by which institution he was made D.D. in 1810. He died in 1824, in his 100th year.—Sprague, Annals, iii, 253.

Caldwell, James, a Presbyterian minister, was born in Charlotte county, Va., 1734, graduated at Princeton in 1759, and in 1761 was ordained pastor of the Presbyterian church of Elizabethtown, N. J. At the Revolution he entered with spirit into the controversy, and was soon branded as a rebel; and on the formation of the Jersey brigade, he was at once selected as its chaplain. Throughout the war he suffered severely; toward the close of it, his church was burnt and his wife murdered by the enemy. The people reposed great confidence in him, and his labors, counsels, and exhortations were of great assistance to the cause he had espoused. This honored patriot was killed in 1781, at Elizabethport, by a drunken soldier named Morgan, who was tried, convicted, and hung upon the charge of murder. Caldwell was a man of unwearied activity and of wonderful powers of endurance. As a preacher he was uncommonly eloquent and pathetic.—Sprague, Annals, iii, 222.

Caldwell, Joseph, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, the author of a System of Geometry and a Treatise of Plane Trigonometry, was born in New Jersey A.D. 1773, graduated at Princeton 1791, and became Professor of Mathematics at the University of North Carolina in 1796, in which same year he was licensed as a Presbyterian minister. From 1804 till his death, in 1835, with an intermission of five years, he was President of the University, and to his exertions it owes the respectable position which it now occupies.—Sprague, Annals, iv, 173.

Caldwell, Merritt, A.M., Professor of Metaphysics, was born in Hebron, Me., Nov. 29, 1806. His early education, both religious and academical, was very carefully conducted, and he graduated with honor at Bowdoin College in 1828. In the same year he became principal of the Maine Wesleyan Seminary, Readfield. In 1834 he was elected Professor of Mathematics and Vice-president of Dickinson College, Pa. In 1837 he was transferred to the chair of Metaphysics and English Literature, which he occupied during the rest of his life. He soon became known as a strong thinker and excellent writer by his elaborate contributions to the Methodist Quarterly Review. Nor did his devotion to literature prevent him from taking an interest in the moral questions of the times; and in the cause of temperance especially his labors were abundant and even excessive. In 1846 he visited England as a delegate to the "World's Convention," which formed the "Evangelical Alliance," and took an active part in its proceedings. His health, which had previously been impaired, was apparently improved by his European tour, but in 1847 it failed again, and he died June 6, 1848. Professor Caldwell was a man of uncommonly firm and masculine character. As a proand divided, and the parties passed between the parts (comp. Homer, Il. iii, 208), signifying their willingness to be so divided themselves if they failed to perform their covenant (Gen. xv, 9, 10, 17, 18). The expression "calves of our lips," in Hos. xiv, 2, is figurative signifying the fruits of our lips (Wolf, Juvenci labiorum, Viteb. 1711). As calves were used in sacrifices, the injunction requires us to render the sacrifice of prayer and praise to God, instead of the animal sacrifice (Heb. xiii, 15). See Wemyss, Symbol. Dict. s. v. Compare HEIFER.

CALF-WORSHIP.—This appears to have originated in Egypt, where we know that brutes of nearly all sorts were held in reverence by some one or another of the various nomes into which that country was divided. See ANIMAL WORSHIP. Of all these creatures, however, the calf, or rather bullock, seems to have been most generally adored, especially a peculiar description, or rather peculiarly-colored bull, to which, under the name of Apis or Mnevis, divine honors of the most extraordinary kind were paid throughout Egypt. It is from this form of idolatry that the scriptural examples of calf-worship are clearly derived. Yet it is possible that the commentators are not quite correct in supposing Apis to be the deity whose worship was imitated by the Jews, at least in the first instance. The Egyptians gave that name to a living bull which they worshipped at Memphis; but they also worshipped another living bull in the city of On, or Heliopolis, which they called Mne, or, according to the Greek form, Mnevis, and which they adored as the living emblem of the sun. Now the Israelites, from the circumstance of their living in the land of Goshen, in or near which Heliopolis was situated, and also from the connection of Joseph, the head of their nation, with one of the priestly families of that city, must have been well acquainted with its peculiar forms of idolatry. It is also very probable that many of them had joined in those rites during their sojourn. We might therefore naturally suppose that they would adopt them on this occasion; and the supposition that they did so is confirmed by a very curious fact, which has not yet been noticed, as bearing upon this question. Champollion has observed, in his Panthéon Egyptien, that Mnevis is said by Porphyry and Plutarch to have been a black bull, as Apis unquestionably was; but he assures us that this is not the case with regard to the existing remains of ancient Egypt; for, although in the Egyptian paintings Apis is either colored black or black and white, Mnevis, on the contrary, in the only figure of him hitherto discovered, is colored bright yellow, evidently with the intention of representing a golden image. This fact, though not a conclusive proof, affords a strong presumption that the golden calf was made according to the usual form and color of the images of Mnevis. The annexed engraving represents this symbolical deity of Heliopolis as he is painted on the coffin of a mummy at Turin, the name being distinctly written in hieroglyphical characters, MNE, without the Greek termination. It differs in color only, and not in form, from another painting on the same coffin, which bears the name of Apis. Both have the same trappings—the sun's disk between the horns, surmounted by the plume of ostrich feathers, signifying justice, and the whip, the emblem of power; and both are accompanied by the serpent, representing the spirit of the gods. The bull Mnevis or Mne—for vis is merely a Greek termination—was sumptuously lodged in the city On or Heliopolis, and this is all that we find recorded of him in ancient writers. Far more ancient than Apis, the era of his consecration is lost, and perhaps forever. The only circumstance which is of importance, save that the Israelites fell into his worship, is that he appears to have represented the zodiacal sign which was depicted yellow, while, by a curious anomaly, Apis, whose attributes all coincide with those of the sun, was black. The worship paid to him, though lasting till the downfall of the Egyptian hierarchy, gradually diminished before the more important and popular rites of Apis, and little is said of Mnevis. The following account is chiefly from Kitto and Smith.

1. The most ancient and remarkable notice in the Scriptures on this head is that of the golden calf which was cast by Aaron while the Israelites were encamped at the foot of Sinai. In Exod. xxxii, 4, we are told that Aaron, constrained by the people, in the absence of Moses, made a molten calf of the golden ear-rings of the people, to represent the Elohim which brought Israel out of Egypt. He is also said to have "finished it with a graving-tool;" but the word חֶרֶט, che'ret, may mean a mould (comp. 2 Kings v, 23, Auth. Vers. "bags;" Sept. θυλάκοις). Bochart (Hieroz. lib. ii, cap. xxxiv) explains it to mean, "he placed the earrings in a bag," as Gideon did (Judg. viii, 24). Probably, however, it means that, after the calf had been cast, Aaron ornamented it with the sculptured wings, feathers, and other marks which were similarly represented on the statues of Apis, etc. (Wilkinson, iv, 348). It does not seem likely that the ear-rings would have provided the enormous quantity of gold required for a solid figure. More probably it was a wooden figure laminated with gold, a process which is known to have existed in Egypt. "A gilded ox covered with a pall" was an emblem of Osiris (Wilkinson, iv, 325). See GOLD.

Ancient Egyptian sacred Calf Mnevis.

To punish the apostasy, Moses burnt the calf, and then, grinding it to powder, scattered it over the water, where, according to some, it produced in the drinkers effects similar to the water of jealousy (Num. v). He probably adopted this course as the deadliest and most irreparable blow to their superstition (Jerome, Ep. 128; Plut. De Is. p. 362), or as an allegorical act (Job xv, 16), that of Eusebius. Jerome took up his residence in the Holy Land in the latter part of the fourth century, and remained there till his death. (For an estimate of the value of these geographical authorities, see Reland, Palæst. p. 467 sq.) Pilgrims now streamed to Jerusalem from all parts of the world, and that site was fixed for Golgotha which has remained to the present hour.

4. Erection of the "Church of the Holy Sepulchre" over the Site.—The acts of the Emperor Constantine and his mother Helena gave a permanent and public expression to this tradition. This empress, when very far advanced in life, visited Jerusalem for the express purpose of erecting a church on the spot where the Lord Jesus had been crucified. The preceding details show that the preservation of the memory of the locality was any thing but impossible. Helena would naturally be solicitous to discover the true spot, whence ensues the likelihood that she was not mistaken. She had previously heard that the holy places had been heaped up and concealed by the heathen, and resolved to attempt to bring them to light, εἰς φῶς ἀγαγεῖν (Theoph. in Chron. p. 18). "On her arrival at Jerusalem, she inquired diligently of the inhabitants. Yet the search was uncertain and difficult, in consequence of the obstructions by which the heathen had sought to render the spot unknown. These being all removed, the sacred sepulchre was discovered, and by its side three crosses, with the tablet bearing the inscription written by Pilate" (Robinson, Bibl. Res. ii, 14; Theodoret, i, 17). This account of her proceedings, taken from one who labors to bring into discredit the whole of Helena's proceedings, and who is far too indiscriminate and sweeping in his hostility to the primitive traditions of the Church, shows sufficiently that Helena was cautious in her proceedings; that there did exist a tradition on the subject; that by that tradition the empress was guided; and that she found reason to fix the site of Calvary on the spot where the heathen had erected their temple and set up their profane rites. That no small portion of the marvellous, not to say legendary and incredible, is mixed up in the accounts which the ecclesiastical historians have given, we by no means deny; but we see no reason whatever, and we think such a course very unphilosophical, to throw doubt unsparingly over the whole, as (by no means in the best taste) does Dr. Robinson. However, on the site thus ascertained, was erected, whether by Constantine or Helena, certainly by Roman influence and treasure, a splendid and extensive Christian temple. Socrates (Eccles. Hist. i, 17) says, "The emperor's mother erected over the place where the sepulchre was a most magnificent church, and called it New Jerusalem, building it opposite to that old deserted Jerusalem" (comp. Euseb. Vit. Const. iii, 33). This church was completed and dedicated A.D. 335. It was a great occasion for the Christian world. In order to give it importance and add to its splendor, a council of bishops was convened, by order of the emperor, from all the provinces of the empire, which assembled first at Tyre and then at Jerusalem. Among them was Eusebius, who took part in the solemnities, and held several public discourses in the Holy City (Euseb. Vit. Const.; Robinson, ii, 13). The Church of the Holy Sepulchre was burnt by the Persians in A.D. 614. It was shortly after rebuilt by Modestus with resources supplied by John Eleemor, patriarch of Alexandria. The basilica or martyrion erected under Constantine remained as before. The Mohammedans next became masters of Jerusalem. At length Harûn er-Rashîd made over to Charlemagne the jurisdiction of the holy sepulchre. Palestine again became the scene of battles and bloodshed. Muez, of the race of the Fatimites, transferred the seat of his empire to Cairo when Jerusalem fell into the hands of new masters, and the holy sepulchre is said to have been again set on fire. It was fully destroyed at the command of the third of the Fatimite caliphs in Egypt, the building being razed to the foundations. In the reign of his successor it was rebuilt, being completed A.D. 1048; but instead of the former magnificent basilica over the place of Golgotha, a small chapel only now graced the spot. The Crusades soon began. The Crusaders regarded the edifices connected with the sepulchre as too contracted, and erected a stately temple, the walls and general form of which are admitted to remain to the present day (Robinson, ii, 61). So recently, however, as A.D. 1808, the church of the holy sepulchre was partly consumed by fire; but, being re-

of Central Asia, where even now wild individuals may be found. The species extends through China, Tartary, and Russia, and is principally imported across the mountains into Asia Minor, Syria, and Persia. It is seldom seen at Aleppo (Russel, N. H. Aleppo, ii, 170). One appears figured in the processions of the ancient Persian satrapies among the bas-reliefs of Chehel Minar, where the Arabian species is not seen. It is also this species which, according to the researches of Burckhardt, constitutes the brown Taous variety of single-hunched Turkish or Túrki camels commonly seen at Constantinople, there being a very ancient practice among breeders, not, it appears, attended with danger, of extirpating with a knife the foremost hunch of the animal soon after birth, thereby procuring more space for the pack-saddle and load. It seems that this mode of rendering the Bactrian cross-breed similar to the Arabian camel or dromedary (for Burckhardt misapplies the last name) is one of the principal causes of the confusion and contradictions which occur in the descriptions of the two species, and that the various other intermixtures of races in Asia Minor and Syria, having for their object either to create greater powers of endurance of cold or of heat, of body to carry weight, or to move with speed, have still more perplexed the question. From these causes a variety of names has arisen, which, when added to the Arabian distinctions for each sex, and for the young during every year of its growth, and even for the camels nursing horse-foals, has made the appellatives exceedingly numerous. We notice only—

2. The Arabian camel or dromedary (camelus dromedarius or Arabicus of naturalists, בִּכְרָה, be'ker; and female and young בִּכְרָה, bikrah', both "dromedary," Isa. lx, 6; Jer. ii, 23) is properly the species having naturally but one hunch, and considered as of Western Asiatic or of African origin, although no kind of camel is figured on any monument of Egypt (Wilkinson, Anc. Eg. i, 234), not even where there are representations of live-stock such as that found in a most ancient tomb beneath the pyramid of Gizeh, which shows herdsmen bringing their cattle and domesticated animals to be numbered before a steward and his scribe, and in which we see oxen, goats, sheep, asses, geese, and ducks, but neither horses nor camels. That they were not indigenous in the early history of Egypt is countenanced by the mythical tale of the priests describing "the flight of Typhon, seven days' journey upon an ass." We find, however, camels mentioned in Genesis xii; but being placed last among the cattle given by Pharaoh to Abraham, the fact seems to show that they were not considered as the most important part of his donation. This can be true only upon the supposition that but a few of these animals were delivered to him, and therefore that they were still rare in the valley of the Nile, though soon after there is abundant evidence of the nations of Syria and Palestine having whole herds of them fully domesticated. These seem to imply that the genus Camelus was originally an inhabitant of the elevated deserts of Central Asia, its dense fur showing that a cold but dry atmosphere was to be encountered, and that it came already domesticated, toward the south and west, with the oldest colonies of mountaineers, who are to be distinguished from earlier tribes that subdued the ass, and perhaps from others still more ancient, who, taking to the rivers, descended by water, and afterward coasted and crossed narrow seas. Of the Arabian species two very distinct races are noticed; those of stronger frame but slower pace used to carry burdens varying from 500 to 700 weight, and travelling little more than twenty-four miles per day; and those of lighter form, bred for the saddle with single riders, the fleetest serving to convey intelligence, etc., and travelling at the rate of 100 miles in twenty-four hours. They are designated by several appellations, such as Deloul, the best coming from Oman, or from the Bishareens in Upper Egypt; also Hejin by the Turks, and still other names (e. g. Ashaary, Maherry, Reches, Badees at Herat, Rawahel, and Racambel) in India, all names more or less implying swiftness, the same as δρομάς, swift; the difference between them and a common camel being as great as that between a high-bred Arab mare and an English cart-horse (Layard, Nineveh and Bab. p. 292). Caravans of loaded camels have always scouts and flankers mounted on these light animals, and in earlier ages Cyrus and others employed them in the line of battle, each carrying two archers. The Romans of the third and fourth centuries of our era, as appears from the "Notitia," maintained in Egypt and Palestine several alæ or squadrons mounted on dromedaries; probably the wars of Belisarius with the northern Africans had shown their importance in protecting the provinces bordering on the desert; such was the ala dromedariorum Antana at Ammata in the tribe of Judah, and three others in the Thebais (comp. 1 Sam. xxx, 17). Bonaparte formed a similar corps, and in China and India the native princes and the East India Company have them also.

It is likely the word אַחַשְׁתְּרָנִים, achashteranim' (Esth. viii, 10, 14), rendered "camels," more properly signifies mules (being explained by the addition "sons of mares," mistranslated "young dromedaries"), and implies the swift postage or conveyance of orders, the whole verse showing that all the means of dispatch were set in motion at the disposal of government (see the dissertation on this word by Schelhorn, in the Misc. Lips. x, 231–44). On the other hand, רֶכֶשׁ, re'kesh (translated "mules" in the above passage, and rendered "dromedary" in 1 Kings iv, 28; "swift beast" in Mic. i, 13), we take to be one of the many names for running camels (as above), used to carry expresses; or post-horses, anciently Asiandi or Astandi, now Chuppar or Chuppaw, which, according to Xenophon, existed in Persia in the time of Cyrus, and are still in use under different appellations over all Asia. The kirkaroth' (כִּרְכָּרוֹת, rendered "swift beasts") of Isa. lxvi, 20, were probably also a kind of dromedary.

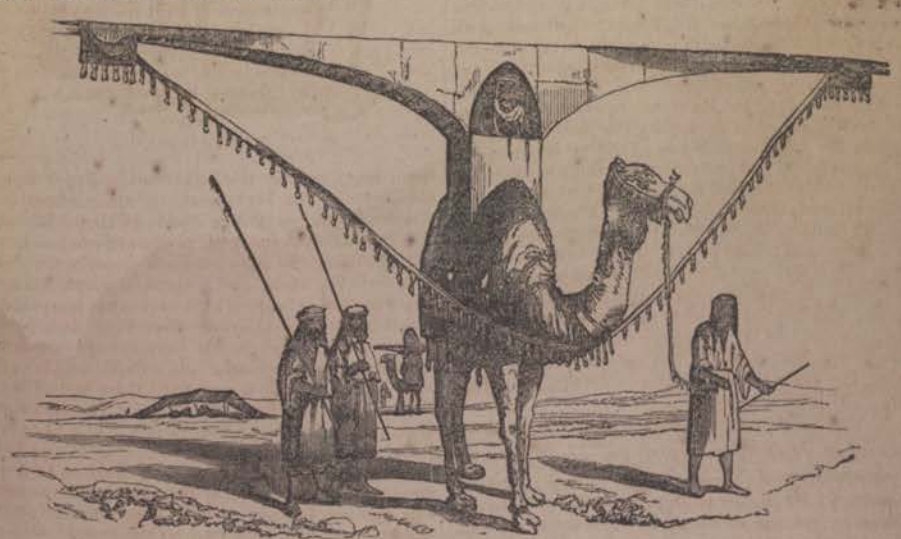
Camel for Baggage.

All camels, from their very birth, are taught to bend their limbs and lie down to receive a load or a rider. They are often placed circularly in a recumbent posture, and, together with their loads, form a sufficient rampart of defence against robbers on horseback. The milk of she-camels is still considered a very nutritive cooling drink (Aristot. Hist. Anim. vi, 25, 1; Pliny, N. H. xi, 41; xxviii, 9), and when turned it becomes intoxicating (such, according to the Rabbins [Rosenmüller, Not. ad Hieroz. i, 10], was the drink offered [Judg. iv, 19] by Jael to Sisera [comp. Josephus, Ant. v, 5, 4]). Their dung supplies fuel in the desert and in sandy regions where wood is scarce; and occasionally it is a kind of resource for horses when other food is wanting in the wilderness. Their flesh, particularly the hunch, is in request among the Arabs (comp. Prosp. Alp. H. N. Æg. i, 226), although forbidden to the Hebrews, more perhaps from motives of economy, and to keep the people from again becoming wanderers, than from any real uncleanness. Camels were early a source of riches to the patriarchs, and from that period became an increasing object of rural importance to the several tribes of Israel, who inhabited the grazing and border districts, but still they never equalled the numbers possessed by the Arabs of the desert. In what manner the Hebrews derived the valuable remunerations obtainable from them does not directly appear, but it may be surmised that by means of their camels they were in possession of the whole trade that passed by land from Asia Minor and Syria to the Red Sea and Egypt, and from the Red Sea and Arabia toward the north and to the Phœnician sea-ports. On swift dromedaries the trotting motion is so hard that to endure it the rider requires a severe apprenticeship; but riding upon slow camels is not disagreeable, on account of the measured step of their walk; ladies and women in general are conveyed upon them in a kind of wicker-work sedan, known as the takht-ravan of India and Persia. In some cases this piece of female equipage presents almost a formidable appearance.



A Shammar Lady on a Camel.

The camels which carried the king's servants or guests, according to Philostratus, were always distinguished by a gilded boss on the forehead. The camel, being a native of Asia, from the earliest ages to the present day has been the chief means of communication between the different regions of the East, and from its wonderful powers of endurance in the desert has enabled routes to be opened which would otherwise have been impracticable. "Their home is the desert; and they were made, in the wisdom of the Creator, to be the carriers of the desert. The coarse and prickly shrubs of the wastes are to them the most delicious food, and even of these they eat but little. So few are the wants of their nature, that their power of going without food, as well as without water, is wonderful. Their well-known habit of lying down upon the breast to receive their burdens is not, as is often supposed, merely the result of training; it is an admirable adaptation of their nature to their destiny as carriers. This is their natural position of repose, as is shown, too, by the callosities upon the joints of the legs, and especially by that upon the breast. Hardly less wonderful is the adaptation of their broad cushioned foot to the arid sands and gravelly soil which it is their lot chiefly to traverse . . . . . As the carriers of the East, the 'ships of the desert,' another important quality of the camel is their sure-footedness" (Robinson, Researches, ii, 632–635). The present geographis bound to come to church and offer up their candles, as though they were bodily with our Ladye; hoping for this reverence and worship that they do to our Ladye to have a great reward in heaven." The following explanation is given by Pope Innocent III: "Why do we carry lighted candles at this festival? The answer may be derived from the book of Wisdom, where it is said (ch. xiv, 23) that the heathen offered sacrifices at night (sacrificia obscura). The Gentiles, indeed, had devoted the month of February to the infernal deities, because, as they ignorantly believed, it was at the beginning of this month that Pluto had ravished Proserpine. Ceres, her mother, had, according to their belief, sought her through Sicily for a whole night by the light of torches kindled at the flames of Ætna. In commemoration of this, they every year, at the beginning of February, travelled the city during the night bearing lighted torches, whence this festival was called amburbale. But the holy fathers, being unable to abolish this custom, decided that lighted candles should be carried in honor of the blessed Virgin Mary; and thus what was formerly done for Ceres is done to-day in honor of the Virgin, and what was done formerly for Proserpine is now done in the praise of Mary" (Innocent III, Opera, "Serm. I. in fest. purif. Mariæ," fol. xlvii, col. 2, ed. Coloniæ, 1552).

The following are the prayers for the hallowing of candles upon Candlemas-day, copied from "The Doctrine of the Mass-book," 1554. The asterisks indicate crossings: "O Lord Jesus Christ, * bless thou this creature of a waxen taper at our humble supplication, and by the virtue of the holy cross pour thou into it an heavenly benediction; that as thou hast granted it unto man's use for the expelling of darkness, it may receive such a strength and blessing, through the token of thy holy cross, that in what places soever it be lighted or set, the Devil may avoid out of those habitations, and tremble for fear, and fly away discouraged, and presume no more to unquiet them that serve thee, who with God," etc. Then follow other prayers, in one of which occur these passages: "We humbly beseech thee that thou wilt vouchsafe to * bless and sanctify these candles prepared unto the uses of men, and health of bodies and souls, as well on the land as the waters." "Vouchsafe * to bless and * sanctify, and with the candle of heavenly benediction to lighten these tapers; which we thy servants taking in the honor of thy name (when they are lighted), desire to bear," etc. "Here let the candles be sprinkled with holy water." The service concludes with this Rubric: "When the hallowing of the candle is done, let the candles be lighted and distributed."

"The festival of St. Agatha, which commences on Candlemas-day in Sicily, strongly resembles the Februan rites. Lighted tapers form a distinguishing part of the ceremonial; and the memory of Proserpine is still cherished, though under another superstition, by kindling a blazing pine torch near the very spot to which the mythological legend assigned the scene of Pluto's amorous force. An account of this festival will be found in Blunt's Vestiges of Ancient Manners in Italy."—Bingham, Orig. Eccles. bk. xx, c. viii, § 4; Augusti, Denkwürdigkeiten, Thl. iii, p. 79; Siegel, Alterthümer, iii, p. 326; Eadie, *Eccles. Candlestick (מְנוֹרָה, menorah'; Chald. נְבְרַשְׁתָּא, nebrashtah'; Sept. and N. T. λυχνία, properly a lamp-stand, as in Matt. v, 15), the candelabrum which Moses was commanded to make for the tabernacle, after the model shown him in the mount. Its form is chiefly known to us by the passages in Exod. xxv, 31-40; xxxvii, 17-24; on which some additional light is thrown by the Jewish writers, and by the representation of the spoils of the Temple on the arch (q. v.) of Titus at Rome, the only veritable monument extant of the kind (Prideaux, Connection, i, 166). It is called in Lev. xxiv, 4, "the pure," and in Ecclus. xxvi, 19, "the holy candlestick." So Diodorus Siculus describes it (x, 100, ed. Bip.) as "the so-called immortal light perpetually burning in the fane" (ὁ ἀθάνατος—λεγόμενος λύχνος καὶ καιόμενος ἀδιαλείπτως ἐν τῷ ναῷ).

The material of which it was made was fine (טָהוֹר, "pure") gold, of which an entire talent was expended on the candelabrum itself and its appendages. The mode in which the metal was to be worked is described by a term (מִקְשָׁה, "beaten [rather turned] work," Sept. τορευτή, Vulg. ductile) which appears to mean wrought with the hammer, as opposed to cast by fusion. Josephus, however, says (Ant. iii, 6, 7) that it was of cast gold (κεχωνευμένη), and hollow. The structure of the candelabrum, as far as it is defined in the passages referred to, consisted of a base (יָרֵךְ, Joseph. βάσις; according to Maimonides, three feet high); of a shaft (קָנֶה, reed, i. e. stem) rising out of it; of six arms, which came out by threes from two opposite sides of the shaft; of seven lamps, which were supported on the summits of the central shaft and the six arms, terminating in seven heads all in one row [?], standing parallel to one another, one by one, in imitation of the planets (Whiston's Josephus, l. c.); and of three different kinds of ornaments belonging to the shaft and arms. These ornaments are called by names which mean cups, circlets, and blossoms: "four bowls made like unto almonds, with their knops and their flowers." The cups (גְּבִיעִים, Sept. κρατῆρες, Vulg. scyphi) receive, in verse 33, the epithet almond-shaped (it being uncertain whether the resemblance was to the fruit or to the flowers). Three such cups are allotted to every arm, but four to the shaft: two-and-twenty in all. See Bowl. Of the four on the shaft, three are mentioned as if set severally under the spots where the three pairs of arms set out from the shaft. The place of the fourth is not assigned; but we may conceive it to have been either between the base and the cup below the lowest tier of arms, or, as Bähr prefers, to have been near the summit of the shaft. As for the name of the second ornament, the circlets (כַּפְתֹּרִים), the word only occurs in two other places in the Old Testament (Am. ix, 1; Zeph. ii, 14), in which it appears to mean the capital of a column; but the Jewish writers generally (cited in Ugolini Thesaur. xi, 917) concur in considering it to mean apples in this place. Josephus, as he enumerates four kinds of ornaments, and therefore two of his terms must be considered identical, may be supposed to have understood globes, or pomegranates (σφαιρία, ῥοΐσκοι, Antiq. iii, 6). But as the term here used is not the common name for pomegranates, and as the Sept. and Vulgate render it σφαιρωτῆρες and spherule, it is safest to assume that it denotes bodies of a spherical shape, and to leave the precise kind undefined. Bähr, however, is in favor of apples (Symbolik, i, 414). See KNOP. The name of the third ornament (פְּרָחִים, κρίνα, lilia) means blossom, bud; but it is so general a term that it may apply to any flower. The Sept., Vulg., Josephus, and Maimonides understand it of the lily, and Bähr prefers the flower of the almond. It now remains to consider the manner in which these three ornaments were attached to the candelabrum. The obscurity of verse 33, which orders that there shall be "three almond-shaped cups on one arm, globe and blossom, and three almond-shaped cups on the other arm, globe and blossom, and so on all the arms which come out of the shaft," has led some to suppose that there was only one globe and blossom to every three cups. However, the fact that, according to verse 34, the shaft (which, as being the principal part of the whole, is here called the candelabrum itself), which had only four cups, is ordered to have globes and blossoms (in the plural), is a sufficient proof to the contrary. According to Josephus, the ornaments on the shaft and branches were 70 in number, and this was a notion in which the Jews, with their peculiar reverence for that number, would readily coincide; but it seems difficult, from the description in Exodus, to confirm the statement. It is to be observed that the original text does not define the height and breadth of any part of the candelabrum; nor whether the shaft and arms were of equal height; nor whether the arms were curved round the shaft, or left it at a right angle, and then ran parallel with it. The Jewish authorities maintain that the height of the candelabrum was eighteen palms, or about five feet; and that the distance between the outer lamps on each side was about 3¾ feet (Jahn, Bibl. Arch. § 329). Bähr, however, on the ground of harmonical proportion with the altar of incense and table of shew-bread, the dimensions of which are assigned, conjectures that the candelabrum was only an ell and a half high and broad. The Jewish tradition uniformly supports the opinion that the arms and shaft were of equal height, as do also Josephus and Philo (l. c.; Quis Rer. Div. Hær. § 44), as well as the representation on the Arch of Titus. Scacchius has, however, maintained that they formed a pyramid, of which the shaft was the apex. The lamps themselves were doubtless simply set upon the summits of the shafts, and removed for the purpose of cleaning. As the description given in Exodus is not very clear, we abbreviate Lightfoot's explanation of it. "The foot of it was gold, from which went up a shaft straight, which was the middle light. Near the foot was a golden dish wrought almondwise, and a little above that a golden knop, and above that a golden flower. Then two branches, one on each side, bowed, and coming up as high as the middle shaft. On each of them were three golden cups placed almondwise on sharp, scallop-shell fashion, above which was a golden knop, a golden flower, and the socket. Above the branches on the middle shaft was a golden boss, above which rose two shafts more; above the coming out of these was another boss, and two more shafts, and then on the shaft upward were three golden scallop-cups, a knop, and a flower, so that the heads of the branches stood an equal height" (Works, ii, 397, ed. Pitman). Calmet remarks that "the number 7 might remind them of the Sabbath:" we have seen that Josephus gives it a somewhat Egyptian reference to the number of the planets, but elsewhere (War, vii, 5, 5) he assigns to the 7 branches a merely general reference to the Jewish hebdomadal division of time. The whole weight of the candlestick was 100 minæ (see Lamy, De Tab. Fœd.). It has been calculated to have been worth £25,380, exclusive of workmanship.

This candelabrum was placed in the Holy Place, on the south side (i. e. to the left of a person entering the tabernacle), opposite the table of shew-bread (Exod. xxvi, 35). Its lamps, which were supplied with wick (? of cotton) and half a log (about two wine-glasses) of pure olive oil only, were lighted every evening, and extinguished (as it seems) every morning (Exod. xxvii, 21; xxx, 7, 8; Lev. xxiv, 3; 1 Sam. iii, 3; 2 Chron. xiii, 11). Although the tabernacle had no windows (Exod. xxx, 8; Macc. iv, 50), there is no good ground for believing that the lamps burnt by day in it, whatever may have been the usage of the second Temple. It has also been much disputed whether the candelabrum stood lengthwise or diagonally as regards the tabernacle; but no conclusive argument can be adduced for either view. According to Josephus, it was placed in an oblique position (λοξῶς), so that the lamps looked to the east and south (Ant. iii, 6, 7; Exod. xxv, 37). As the lamp on the central shaft was by the Jewish writers called the western, or evening lamp, some maintain that the former name could not be applicable unless the candelabrum stood across the tabernacle, as then only would the central lamp point to the west. Others, again, adhere to the latter signification, and build on a tradition that the central lamp alone burnt from evening to evening, the other six being extinguished by day (Reland, Antiq. i., 5, 8). The priest in the morning trimmed the lamps with greater amount of taxes on releases and heritages, which were paid only by citizens. In his campaigns he imitated at one time Alexander, at another time Sulla; while his main object was to oppress and exhaust the provinces, which had been in a great measure spared by the tyranny of former emperors. In 217 he was assassinated, at the instigation of Macrinus, prefect of the Prætorians, by one of his veterans named Martialis, on the 8th of April, 217, on the way from Edessa to Carrhæ. Historians paint the life of Caracalla in the darkest colors. Among the buildings of Caracalla in Rome, the baths—Thermæ Caracallæ—near Porta Copena, were most celebrated, and their ruins are still magnificent." Caracalla, cruel to mankind, was yet indifferent to religion, and during his reign no new persecutions were devised against the Christians. Spartianus (Vita Caracalli, i, 707) tells a story of his being greatly affected, at seven years of age, on hearing that a Jewish boy had been punished for his religion. From a passage in Tertullian (ad Scapulam, cap. 4) it is inferred that Caracalla had a Christian nurse.—Chambers's Encyc.; Lardner, Works, vii, 310–312; Gibbon, Dec. and Fall (ed. Milman), ch. vi.

Caraccioli, Galeazzo, marquis of Vico, one of the earliest and most distinguished followers of the Reformation in Italy. Born in Naples, in 1517, of a noble family, which had given warriors to the field and cardinals to the Church, he began life with the most brilliant prospects. Married at twenty to Vittoria, daughter of the duke of Novera, he had by her six children. In 1541 he heard Peter Martyr, and after a long and painful investigation, in spite of the distressing conviction that he would have to leave family, friends, home, and wealth in abandoning Rome, he became a Protestant, and in 1551 escaped to Geneva. His father, his uncle cardinal Caraffa, his wife, and his children sought for many years to change his purpose, but in vain. In Geneva he acquired the entire confidence of Calvin, who dedicated to him his Commentary on 1 Corinthians (edit. Tholuck, p. 205). He died in great peace, 1586. His life, by Balbano, will be found in the Museum Helveticum, viii, 1748, p. 519; and, abridged, in Gerdes, Specimen Italiæ Reformatæ (Lugd. Bat. 1765, 4to). See M'Crie, Reformation in Italy; Herzog, Real-Encyklopädie, ii, 574.

Caramuel (Juan de Lobkowitz), a Spanish theologian, was born at Madrid, May 23, 1606. He became a Cistercian, and after several preferments, among which was the abbey of Melrose, in Scotland, was made vicar general of the archbishopric of Prague. When the Swedes, in 1648, besieged the city, Caramuel, forgetting his episcopal character, set himself at the head of a body of ecclesiastics on the battle-field. His services were rewarded by the emperor with a collar of gold. In 1657 he was made bishop of Campagna, in Naples, which he resigned in 1673, but afterward became bishop of Vigevano, in the Milanese, where he died, Sept. 8, 1682. He was "a man of vast but ill-digested learning, with an ill-regulated imagination. His moral theology (Theologia Moralis, Louvain, 1643, fol.) is so universally decried that even Romanists have censured it. He taught that the commandments of the Decalogue are not immutable in their nature, and that God is able to change or dispense with them, as in cases of theft, adultery, etc.; he also held that the smallest degree of probability justified any criminal action." A list of his numerous writings (37 volumes) is given by Nicolas Antonio, Bibliotheca Hisp. Nova.—Nouv. Biog. Générale, viii, 666.

Caravan, the Arabic name for a body of pilgrims or merchants travelling in the East. Orientals who have occasion to journey—whether for pleasure, religion, or profit—usually do so in companies, for the sake of society as well as protection. Hence the most motley associations may take place. They often consist of hundreds of persons, mostly mounted on camels, which (including those for baggage) frequently amount to several thousands. Such spectacles are common in all parts of Turkey, Persia, and Arabia, especially through the sandy deserts. They march at first disorderly, but after a short period of practice with great regularity, mostly by night, in companies which are each kept together by a large beacon-fire on the top of its own peculiar standard. Much time is consumed in packing and unpacking; but when this confused scene of preparation is over, they travel with great uniformity (see Ezek. xii, 3) from about eight P.M. till about midnight (Luke xi, 5, 6). In the cooler seasons they journey by day, only halting for a brief repast at noon. Seven or eight hours is the usual day's stage (Hornemann, p. 150), or about 17 to 20 miles. See Traveller.

be his covering. He is usually obliged to content himself with such cold food or fruits as he has himself brought. His outfit should therefore consist at least of the following articles: a carpet, a mattress, a blanket, two saucepans with lids, contained within each other; two dishes, two plates, etc., a coffee-pot, all of well-tinned copper; also a small wooden box for salt and pepper, a round leather table, which he suspends from his saddle, small leather bottles or bags for oil, melted butter, water, a tinder-box, a cocoanut cup, some rice, dried raisins, dates, and, above all, coffee-berries, with a roaster and a wooden mortar to pound them: all this is in addition to such more substantial provisions as he may prefer or can conveniently carry. The porter in attendance can only be relied upon to show him his chamber, and perhaps furnish him with a key. In case of sickness, however, the latter is generally able to administer simple remedies, and may even set a broken limb. — Kitto, s. v. See CARAVAN.

Carbuncle is the rendering in the Auth. Vers. of the following Heb. and Gr. words: 1. אֶקְדָּח, ekdach', only Isa. liv, 12 (Sept. κρύσταλλος, Vulg. [lapis] sculptus), some sparkling gem (from קָדַח, to inflame). 2. בָּרְקַת, bare'keth, only Exod. xxviii, 17, and xxxix, 10, as the third in the first row of the high-priest's breastplate (Sept. σμάραγδος, Vulg. smaragdus, i. e. emerald); or בָּרֶקֶת, barekath', only Ezek. xxviii, 13 (Sept. ὀνύχιον, Vulg. smaragdus). From the etymology (בָּרַק, to flash), we assume that a stone of a bright coruscant color is meant. Kalisch translates it smaragd, or emerald, and says it is a sort of precious corundum of strong glass lustre, a beautiful green color, with many degrees of shade, pellucid and doubly refractive. Pliny enumerates twelve species of emerald. They are not rare in Egypt (see Braun. de Vest. Sacerdott. p. 517 sq.). 3. Ἄνθραξ, lit. a coal of fire, Tobit xiii, 17; Ecclus. xxxii, 5. 4. The carbuncle is thought by many to be denoted by the word נֹפֶךְ, no'phek ("emerald," Exod. xxviii, 18; xxxix, 11; Ezek. xxvii, 16; xxviii, 13). See EMERALD. Under the name "carbuncle" are comprehended several brilliant red stones of the clay family which resemble a glowing coal, such as the ruby, the garnet, the spinel, but particularly the almandin, that is, the noble Oriental garnet, a transparent red stone with a violet shade and strong glass lustre. Probably it is not so hard as the ruby, which, indeed, is the most beautiful and costly of the precious stones of red color, but, at the same time, so hard that engravings cannot easily be made in it (Rosenmüller, Alterth. iv, 1, 34). In the present state of our knowledge respecting the ancient Hebrew mineralogy, it is impossible to determine with precision what particular gem is denoted by either of these terms, although they all evidently were precious stones of a brilliant fiery hue. See GEM.

Car'cas (Heb. כַּרְכַּס, Karkas', comp. the Sanscrit karkaça, severe; Sept. Θαβάζ v. r. Θαραβά, Vulg. Charchas), the last named of the seven eunuchs ("chamberlains") in the harem of Ahasuerus (Xerxes), who were directed to bring queen Vashti into the royal convivial party (Esth. i, 10). B.C. 483.

Carcase (נְבֵלָה, פֶּגֶר, πτῶμα), the dead body of a man or beast (Josh. viii, 29; Isa. xiv, 19; Heb. iii, 17, etc.). According to the Mosaic law, any Israelite became ceremonially unclean until the evening (and in turn rendered whatever he touched unclean, Hag. ii, 14; comp. Num. xix, 22), by (unwitting) contact, under any circumstances, with a dead animal of the "unclean" class (Lev. v, 2; xi, 8 sq.; comp. Deut. xiv, 8), or with any "clean" animal, in case it had not been regularly slain according to the prescribed mode (Lev. xi, 39 sq.). The eating of any (clean) beast that had died an accidental or natural death was still more strictly forbidden (Lev. xxii, 8; comp. Ezek. iv, 14; xliv, 31); but it might be sold as food to a foreigner (Deut. xiv, 2). Carrion was doubtless buried or burned. On the sepulture of persons found dead, see HOMICIDE. An unburied carcase (Jer. xxxvi, 30; Psa. lxxix, 3) was considered by the ancients the height of indignity and misfortune (Virgil, Æn. x, 559). See BURIAL. The Levitical enactments respecting all dead bodies evidently had their origin in sanitary reasons in a climate so liable to pestilence (Michaelis, Mos. Recht, iv, 309 sq.). On the incident of the beehive in the skeleton (Judg. xiv, 8), see BEE.—Winer, i, 2. On the allusion to the vulture's scent for putrid flesh, Matt. xxiv, 28 (Loder, De cadavere Judaico, ab aquilis Romanis discerpendo, Argent. 1715; Rechenberg, De adagio Christi, etc., Lips. 1696), see EAGLE. Carob. See Husk.

Carol, a hymn sung by the people at Christmas. "The Christmas carol may be traced to the primitive Church. Tertullian (advers. Gentil. 39) states that at their feasts it was customary for the Christians to place in the middle such as were able to sing, and call upon them to praise God in a hymn, either out of the Scriptures or of their own invention. Durand also informs us (Rel. vi, 86, 9) that it was usual for the bishops on Christmas day to make sport, and even to sing with their clergy; and this custom was an imitation of the Gloria in excelsis of the angels, as we learn from Jeremy Taylor—"These blessed choristers had sung their Christmas carol, and taught the Church a hymn to put into her offices forever, on the anniversary of this festivity." For the popular carols of England, see Brand, Popular Antiquities, i, 262 sq.; Chambers, Book of Days, ii, 747 sq.—Eadie, Eccles. Dictionary, s. v.; Sandys, Christmas Carols, Ancient and Modern (Lond. 1833, 8vo). See Mysteries.

Caroline Books (Libri Carolini or Opus Carolinum), four books written against decrees of the second Council of Nice on the adoration of images, contained in the Capitulare Prolixum of Charlemagne. These books were drawn up under the direction of Charlemagne, but their preparation has been ascribed to Angilram, bishop of Metz, Angilbert, and to Alcuin. Roger de Hoveden directly names the last, and the most probable opinion is that Alcuin was the writer. At all events, they were written before the Synod of Frankfort in 794, and were published in the name of Charlemagne during the sitting of that council. In the preface the emperor declares that he had undertaken the work "Zelo Dei et veritatis studio, cum confidentia regni sui sacerdotum." The great principles of these books are the following:

Lib. ii, c. 21: Solus igitur Deus colendus, solus adorandus, solus glorificandus est, de quo per Prophetam dicitur: "Exaltatum est nomen ejus solius" (Psa. cxlviii, 13): Cujus etiam Sanctis, qui triumphato diabolo cum eo regnant, sive quia viriliter certaverunt, ut ad nos incolumis status ecclesiæ perveniret, sive quia eandem ecclesiam assiduis suffragiis et intercessionibus adjuvare noscuntur, veneratio exhibenda est: imagines vero, omni sui cultura et adoratione seclusa, utrum in basilicis propter memoriam rerum gestarum et ornamentum sint, an etiam non sint, nullum fidei catholicæ adferre poterunt præjudicium: quippe cum ad peragenda nostræ salutis mysteria nullum penitus officium habere noscantur. Lib. iii, c. 16: Nam dum nos nihil in imaginibus spernamus præter adorationem, quippe qui in basilicis Sanctorum imagines non ad adorandum, sed ad memoriam rerum gestarum et venustatem parietum habere permittimus: illi vero pene omnem suæ credulitatis spem in imaginibus collocent; restat, ut nos Sanctos in eorum corporibus vel potius reliquiis corporum, seu etiam vestimentis veneremur, juxta antiquorum patrum traditionem: illi vero parietes et tabulas adorantes in eo se arbitrentur magnum fidei habere emolumentum, eo quod operibus sint subjecti pictorum. Nam etsi a doctis quibusque vitari possit hoc, quod illi in adorandis imaginibus exercent, qui videlicet non quid sint, sed quid innuant venerantur, indoctis tamen quibusque scandalum generant, qui nihil aliud in his præter id quod vident venerantur et adorant.

The Caroline books were first printed by Jean du Tillet, bishop of Meaux, under the assumed name of Eriphilus, or Elias Philyra (Paris, 1549, 8vo), at Cologne in 1555; by Goldastus, 1608; and in his Constitution. Imperial. tom. i; and, lastly, by Heumannus at Hanover (1731, 8vo), under the title Augusti Concilii Nicæni Secundi Censura.—Palmer, Treat. on the Church, pt. iv, ch. x, § 4; Bergier, Dict. de Théologie, s. v. Image; Gieseler, Church History, per. iii, § 12; Herzog, Real-Encyklopädie, vii, 429; Landon, *Eccles. Carpenter, the rendering in the Auth. Vers. of the Heb. חָרָשׁ, charash' (2 Sam. v, 11; 1 Chron. xiv, 1; Isa. xliv, 13, etc.), as also of its Greek equivalent τέκτων (Matt. xiii, 55; Mark vi, 3; 1 Esdr. v, 14; Ecclus. xxxviii, 27, etc.), a general name, applicable to an artificer in stone, iron, or copper, as well as in wood. See Artificer. The Hebrews, at a very early period, appear to have made considerable progress in these arts (Exod. xxxv, 30-35). See Art. Of their works, however, we have no existing remains; but by a reference to the antiquities of Egypt, the country where their proficiency was acquired, we may obtain a satisfactory notion of their general character. See Handicraft. Tools of various kinds used in carpentry, as axes, hammers, saws, planes, chisels, and centre-bits, are represented on the ancient monuments, and to most of them we find allusions in Scripture (1 Sam. xiii, 19, 20; Judg. iv, 21; Isa. x, 15; xliv, 13). There appears but little difference between these implements and those of our time. See Turner. The ancient Egyptians were acquainted with the art of veneering: this proves that they knew the use of glue. They had chairs and couches of very graceful form (comp. Gen. xliii, 33; 1 Sam. iv, 18). Among the works of the Egyptian artists are found tables, bureaus, wardrobes, and coffers; several of the latter, probably designed for jewel-cases, rival in beauty the caskets of gold and silver. See Mechanic.

Carpenter, Charles W., a Methodist Episcopal minister, was born in New York, Dec. 16, 1792, where his parents were members of the John Street Church. He entered Columbia College, but was compelled by ill health to quit before graduation. He was converted in his eighteenth year, and was licensed by Freeborn Garretson to preach in 1812. He entered the itinerant ministry in the New York Conference in 1814, but in 1816 he was obliged, by the weakness of his health, to go to Savannah, where he was engaged in business for ten years. During this time he labored as a local preacher, and was ordained deacon in 1820, and elder in 1826. In 1828 he returned to the North, and was readmitted into the New York Conference, in which he filled important appointments, as pastor and presiding elder, until 1850, when he was compelled by ill health to become supernumerary. He died May, 1853, at Plattekill, N. Y. He was of very uniform character, good literary acquirements, Carroll, John, D.D., first Roman Catholic archbishop in the United States, was born at Upper Marlborough, Maryland, in 1734. He was educated at St. Omer's, France, and at the colleges of Liege and Bruges, in Belgium. In 1769 he was ordained priest, and became a Jesuit. When the order was dissolved in France he went to England, and became tutor to a son of Lord Stourton, with whom he travelled on the Continent. On the breaking out of the Revolutionary War he returned to America, and took an active part on the side of the patriots. After the close of the war, the Roman Catholic clergy in the United States requested from the pope the establishment of a hierarchy, and Mr. Carroll was appointed vice-general. He fixed his residence at Baltimore. In 1789 he was named bishop, and in the ensuing year was consecrated. In 1791 he assumed the title of bishop of Baltimore. A few years before his death he was made archbishop. He died Dec. 3, 1815.

Carson, Alexander, LL.D., a Baptist minister, was born in Scotland about 1776, but early removed to Ireland. He began his public life at Tubbermore as a minister in connection with the Presbyterian Synod of Ulster, but having changed his opinions as to Church government, and adopted the views of the Independents, he seceded in 1803. Embracing Independent Baptist views, he formed a society at Tubbermore, of which he remained pastor to the time of his death. He wrote, in 1803, his Reasons for separating from the Synod of Ulster; and afterward produced numerous books and pamphlets—on baptism and other subjects of controversy—which are highly esteemed by the Baptists. Though a strenuous advocate of immersion, he was not a "close" communionist. After many years of incessant activity, pastoral and literary, he died at Belfast, Aug. 24, 1844, from the effects of a sudden fall into the Mersey at Liverpool a few days before. Dr. Carson was an earnest and often bitter controversialist. His dogmatism and arrogance detract greatly from the effect of his arguments. He is often right, often wrong; but, whether right or wrong, he is equally self-confident. Besides a number of pamphlets, reviews, etc., he published The God of Providence the God of the Bible (18mo):—Theories of Inspiration (18mo):—The Knowledge of Jesus (18mo):—The Unitarian Mystery (8vo):—Examination of the Principles of Biblical Interpretation of Ernesti, Stuart, Ammon, etc.:—a Treatise on Figures of Speech, and a Treatise on the Right and Duty of all men to read the Scriptures (N. Y. 1855, 12mo):—Baptism, in its Mode and Subjects, with a Sketch of the Life of Dr. Carson (Phila. 1857, 5th ed. 8vo).—Jamieson, Cyclopædia of Biography; Reid, History of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland, iii, 449.

Carstares, William, a Scotch divine and politician, was born in 1649, at Cathcart, near Glasgow, and completed his studies at the Universities of London and Utrecht. While in Holland he was introduced to the prince of Orange, who honored him with his confidence. After his return to England he became connected with the party which strove to exclude James from the throne, and, on suspicion of being one of the Rye-house conspirators, he was sent to Scotland, and put to the torture of the thumbscrew, which he bore with unshrinking firmness. On his liberation he went back to Holland, and became one of the prince of Orange's chaplains. He accompanied William to England in 1688, and was appointed king's chaplain for Scotland. He was subsequently of great service in producing a reconciliation between the Scottish Presbyterians and William III. A General Assembly being about to convene, at which it was understood that there would be opposition to the oath of allegiance, the king had delivered to a messenger dispatches directing the peremptory enforcement of the act. It is said that Carstares assumed authority to stop the messenger; and, presenting himself to the king (who had gone to bed) in the middle of the night, in the guise of a petitioner for his life, forfeited by his having thus committed high treason, to have prevailed on him to dispense with the oath. Whether the anecdote be true or not, there is little doubt that his influence obtained the dispensation. He became now virtually prime minister for Scotland, and received the popular designation of "Cardinal Carstares." Even after the death of William, his knowledge of Scottish affairs, and the respect paid to his talents, left him with considerable influence. In 1704 he was chosen principal of the University of Edinburgh. He died Dec. 28, 1715. See State Papers and Letters, to which is prefixed the Life of Mr. Carstares (4to, 1714); Engl. Cyclopædia; Hetherington, Church of Scotland, ii, 216.

Cart (עֲגָלָה, agalah', from עָגַל, to roll; Sept. ἅμαξα [so in Judith xv, 11], Vulg. plaustrum; also rendered "wagon," Gen. xlv, 19, 21, 27; xlvi, 5; Num. vii, 3, 6, 7, 8; and "chariot" in Psa. xlvi, 9 [comp. Cart-wheel]), a vehicle moving on wheels, and usually drawn by cattle (2 Sam. vi, 6), to be distinguished from the chariot drawn by horses. See Chariot.

1. The carts which the king of Egypt sent to assist in transporting Jacob's family from Canaan (Gen. xlv, 19, 27) were manifestly not used in the latter country, but were peculiar to Egypt. These carts or wagons were, of course, not war-chariots, nor such curricles as were in use among the Egyptian nobility. The ready means of transport and travel by the Nile seems to have rendered in a great measure unnecessary any other wheel-carriages than those for war or pleasure. The sculptures, however, exhibit some carts as used by a nomade people (enemies of the Egyptians) in their migrations (comp. Figs. 1 and 2, below).

Carts of the "Tokkari," some foreign nation defeated by the ancient Egyptians.

2. Elsewhere (Num. vii, 3, 6; 1 Sam. vi, 7) we read of carts used for the removal of the sacred arks and utensils. These also were drawn by two oxen. In Rossellini we have found a very curious representation of the vehicle used for such purposes by the Egyptians (Fig. 3). It is little more than a platform on wheels; and the apprehension which induced Uzzah to put forth his hand to stay the ark when shaken by the oxen (2 Sam. vi, 6) may suggest that the cart employed on that occasion was not unlike this, as it would be easy for a jerk to displace whatever might be upon it. See ARK.

Ancient Egyptian Carts: 1, 2, for ordinary purposes; 3, for conveying a Shrine containing a Mummy.

3. In Isa. xxviii, 27, 28, a threshing-dray or sledge is to be understood. See AGRICULTURE.

As it appears that the Israelites used carts, they doubtless employed them sometimes in the removal of agricultural produce. The load or bundles appear to have been bound fast by a large rope; hence "a cart-rope" is made in Isa. v, 18, a symbol of the strong attachment to sinful pleasures and practices induced by long and frequent habit. Carts and wagons were either open or covered (Num. vii, 3), and were used for conveyance of persons (Gen. xlv, 19), burdens (1 Sam. vi, 7, 8), or produce (Amos ii, 13). As there are no roads in Syria and Palestine and the neighboring countries, wheel-carriages for any purpose except conveyance of agricultural produce are all but unknown; and though modern usage has introduced European carriages drawn by horses into Egypt, they were unknown there also in times comparatively recent (Stanley, Sinai and Pal. p. 135; Porter, Damascus, i, 339; Lynch, Narrative, p. 75, 84; Niebuhr, Voyage, i, 123; Layard, Nineveh, ii, 75; Mrs. Poole, Englishwoman in Egypt, 2d series, p. 77). The only cart used in Western Asia has two wheels of solid wood (Olearius, Travels, p. 418; drawn by oxen, conveying female captives; and others represent carts captured from enemies with captives, and also some used in carrying timber and other articles (Layard, Nineveh, ii, 396; Nin. and Bab. p. 134, 447, 583; Mon. of Babylon, pt. ii, pls. 12, 17). Four-wheeled carriages are said by Pliny (Nat. Hist. vii, 56) to have been invented by the Phrygians (Wilkinson, Anc. Egypt. Abridgment, i, 384, 385; ii, 39, 47). The carts used in India for conveying goods, called suggar or hackeri, have two wheels, in the former case of solid wood, in the latter with spokes. They are drawn by oxen harnessed to a pole (Capper, India, p. 346, 352). —Kitto, s. v.; Smith, s. v. See WAGON.

Carter, ABIEL, a minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was born at Concord, N. H., May 2, 1791. He graduated A.B. at Dartmouth College in 1813, and soon after began the study of law at New York; but, turning his attention to religion, he left the Congregational Church, in which he had been educated, and became a student of theology under bishop Hobart, by whom he was ordained deacon in 1815. He at once became assistant to Dr. Lyell at Christ Church, New York. He was ordained priest in 1816, and became rector of Trinity Church, Pittsburg, Pa., whence he removed in 1818 to St. Michael's Church, Trenton, N. J. In 1822 he became rector of Christ Church, Savannah, Georgia. In 1827 the yellow fever raged in Savannah, and although it had been stipulated in his call that he should spend the summer of each year in the North, he refused to leave his people. His wife soon fell a victim to the pestilence, which also carried him away, Nov. 1, 1827. He published a number of occasional sermons. — Sprague, Annals, v, 584.

Carthage, a famous ancient city on the coast of Africa, founded by Tyrian colonists, and long the rival of Rome, by which it was taken and destroyed, B.C. 146. It was again rebuilt, however, and continued to flourish till the Vandal invasion (see a full account in Smith's Dict. of Class. Geogr. s. v.). Its site has lately been explored (Davis, Ruins of Carthage, Lond. 1861).

In Christian and ecclesiastical times Carthage was the metropolis of the proconsular province of Africa, and the seat of a bishop, having metropolitan authority over all the provinces of the African Church. All the African churches were dependent on the see of Rome, probably because their greater intercourse with Rome had made Latin the language of the country, and it was therefore more natural that they should be connected with the Latin than the Greek Church. Until the time of Constantine, the bishop of Carthage was the only prelate in the African Church having metropolitan jurisdiction; but under Constantine Africa was divided into six provinces, and each province began to have its own metropolitan, taking, however, the title of primate, and not that of metropolitan, which was still peculiar to the bishop of Carthage. This prelate, from the first, had authority to select whom he pleased from any church in Africa to consecrate to a vacant see (third Council of Carthage); for the bishop of Carthage had also the privilege of nominating to all the vacant sees of Africa. It was farther a privilege enjoyed by the primate of Carthage to convoke general and diocesan synods, to preside in them, and to judge therein of appeals brought thither from the provincial councils. That the African Church acknowledged no papal authority in the Roman see is evident from the well-known case of the priest Apiarius, where the African bishops denied the authority of the pope to receive appeals from the decisions of their synods, and his right to send a legate to take any sort of cognizance of their proceedings. In 691 the Saracens got possession of the city of Carthage, and of all this part of Africa, from which period the Church began to fall away; and though it was still in existence, under Leo IX, in the eleventh century, it soon after became entirely extinct.—Landon, Eccles. Dictionary, s. v.

CARTHAGE, COUNCILS OF. Among the most important are the following:

I. In 218–22 (?), under Agrippinus, on the baptism of heretics.

II. In 251, on the election of Cornelius as bishop of Rome, and the disputes of Novatian and Felicissimus.

III. In 252, on early baptism.

IV. In 253, on the baptism of infants and heretics. Cyprian presided, and 66 bishops are said to have been present. On the question whether baptism should be administered to infants before the eighth day, in view of the rite of circumcision, the council decided unanimously that God had no respect either to persons or ages; that circumcision was but the figure of the mystery of Jesus Christ, and that no one may be shut out from the grace of God. Cyprian, who wrote this decision to Fidus in his own name and in that of his colleagues, gives the reason for it in these words: "If the greatest sinners coming to the faith receive remission of sin and baptism, how much less can we reject a little infant just born into the world, free from actual sin, and only so far a sinner as being born of Adam after the flesh, and by its first birth having contracted the pollution of the former death; it ought to have so much the easier access to the remission of sins, inasmuch as not its own sins, but those of others, are remitted." These words are quoted by Jerome in his dialogues against the Pelagians, and by Augustine in his 294th sermon, in order to prove that belief in original sin has always been the faith of the Church.—Cyprian, Epist. 55, Labbe et Cossart, Concilia, t. i, p. 749; Landon, Manual of Councils, 101.

V. Held in 254 (?), when the Spanish bishops Martialis and Basilides were deposed as Libellatici.

VI. Held in 255 and 256, under Cyprian, on the necessity of rebaptizing heretics—attended by 71 bishops. They decided that there can be no valid baptism out of the Catholic Church, and addressed a synodical letter to Stephen of Rome upon the subject, informing him of their decision upon this and other matters. Stephen refused to admit the decision, and separated himself from the communion of Cyprian and the other bishops who acted with him in the council. The conflict lasted until the pontificate of Sixtus, when the African bishops gave up their theory of the invalidity of heretical baptism.—Labbe et Cossart, Concil. t. i, p. 793; Landon, Manual of Councils, p. 102.

VII. Held in 330, in favor of those who were steadfast in the persecution.

VIII. Held in 397 and 398, on discipline and the baptism of children.

IX. Two in 401, in which numerous canons were made on receiving converted children of Donatists among the clergy.

X. Two in 408, on pagans, heretics, and Donatists.

XI. Commencing June 1, 411, in which conferences were held with the Donatists, with a view to their reunion with the Church. Augustine was present, and argued the case from the side of the Church. At the close of the conference, Marcellinus, who represented the emperor Honorius in the council, gave sentence to the effect that the Donatists had been entirely refuted by the Catholics; and that, accordingly, those of the Donatists who should refuse to unite themselves to the Church should be punished as the laws directed. From this sentence the Donatists appealed to the emperor, but in vain. Honorius confirmed the acts of the Conference of Carthage by a law, bearing date Aug. 30, 414. This conference and the severe measures which followed it gave the death-blow to Donatism.—Labbe et Cossart, Concil. t. iii, p. 107; Neander, Church History, ii, 203 sq.; Landon, Manual of Councils, p. 111.

XII. Held in 411 or 412, against Cœlestius, disciple of Pelagius. Cœlestius was accused by Paulinus, among other things, of teaching that the sin of Adam only injured himself, and that its effects have not descended to his posterity, and that every child is born into the world in the same condition in which Adam was before the Fall. Cœlestius did not deny the accusation; for, although he agreed that children must of necessity receive redemption by baptism, yet he refused to acknowledge that the sin of Adam had passed upon them; nor would he confess, unequivocally, that they receive therein remission of any sin: accordingly he was condemned and excommunicated.—Labbe et Cossart, Concil. t. iii, p. 347 sq.; Landon, Manual of Councils, p. 111; Mansi, Concil. iv, 289.

XIII. Held in 416, against Pelagius and Cœlestius. The doctrines of Pelagius were condemned by this council in a decree which was approved by Innocent I, bishop of Rome.

XIV. Held in 418, at which more than 200 bishops took part, under the presidency of Aurelius. Augustine styles it "the Council of Africa." Its decrees against Pelagianism were the triumph of Augustinism, and finally received the general approval of the Church. Prosper has preserved one of these decrees, in which the council declares that the grace of God given to us through Jesus Christ not only assists us to know what is right, but also to practise it in each particular action, so that without it we can neither have, nor think, nor say, nor do anything which appertains to holiness and true piety. The council agreed upon a letter to Zosimus, bishop of Rome, demanding that the sentence of condemnation passed by Innocent I against Pelagius and Cœlestius should be enforced until they should abjure their errors. — Mansi, Concil. iii, 810; iv, 377; Landon, Manual of Councils, p. 112; Schaff, Ch. Hist. iii, 798.

Carthusians, an order of monks in the Roman Catholic Church, founded by St. Bruno (q. v.) A.D. 1086. A legend of much later origin tells the following story: At the funeral of a friend of Bruno's in 1082, the dead man raised himself up, saying, "By the just judgment of God I am accused!" This was repeated on the two following days, and had such an effect on Bruno and six more that they immediately retired to the desert of the Chartreuse, and there built the first monastery. This absurd legend found its way into the Roman breviary, but was struck out by order of Pope Urban VIII. After Bruno had governed the first establishment for about six years, Pope Urban II, his former pupil, called him to Rome, and retained him there, although Bruno begged for permission to return to his brethren. The order increased slowly. In 1137 they counted four, in 1151 fourteen, and in 1258 fifty-six houses. In 1170 the order was recognised by the pope. Martin V exempted all the property of the order from tithes. Julius II provided, in 1508, by a bull, that the prior of the Grande Chartreuse, near Grenoble, should always be the general of the whole order, and that a general chapter should meet annually. At the beginning of the 18th century the number of houses was 170, of which 75 belonged to France. Many houses perished in the French Revolution, but some were re-established after 1815. Their principal establishment, the Grande Chartreuse, was reoccupied in 1816. In England the Carthusians settled in 1180, and had a famous monastery in London, since called, from the Carthusians who settled there, the "Charter-house." The order has given to the Church several saints, three cardinals, and more than seventy archbishops and bishops.

Until 1130 the order had no written statutes. Then the fifth prior of the Chartreuse, Guigo, compiled the Consuetudines Cartusiæ. Bernard de la Tour collected, in 1258, the resolutions of all general chapters which had been held since 1141. This collection was confirmed by the General Chapter of 1259, and bears the title Statuta antiqua. Another collection, Statuta nova, was added in 1367. A third collection, Tertia compilatio statutorum, dates from the year 1509; a fourth, Nova collectio statutorum ordinis Cartusiensis, from the year 1581. The characteristic of the statutes of this order is, that it aims, in the first place, at precluding the members from all intercourse with the world, and even, as far as possible, from all intercourse with each other; secondly, at separating the professi from the lay brothers, who occupy in no other order an equally low position, and are divided into three classes, Conversi, Donati, and Reddîti; thirdly, at separating every single Carthusian monastery from the whole surrounding region and population; and, lastly, at preventing all connection of the order with other monastic orders, and any direct influence on the world or the Church. Thus the whole order, and each individual member, is like a petrifaction from the Middle Ages. The monks wear a hair-cloth shirt, a white cassock, and over it, when they go out, a black cloak. They never eat flesh, and on Friday take only bread and water. They are not allowed to go out of their cells except to church, nor to speak to any person, even their own brother, without leave of their superior. Some of the convents are magnificent, especially those of Naples and Pavia, which have a world-wide renown for their ornaments and riches. In 1843 the order had 3 houses in France, 8 in Italy, and 2 in Switzerland.

Carthusian Nun—at Home.

There are also houses of Carthusian nuns, but the date of their origin is not known. They were always very few in number. Father Helyot, the historian of monachism, knew only of the existence of five, all of which perished by the French Revolution. In 1820 they re-established their first house near Grenoble, in France, and this is still their only establishment.

A history of the order was commenced by father Masson, general of the order, and vol. i published in 1687; but, for unknown reasons, the order forbade the continuance of the work. See also Morstius, Theatrum Chronologicum S. Ordinis Carthusiensis (Taur. 1681); Corbin, Histoire sacrée de l'ordre des Chartreux (Paris, 1653, 4to); Helyot (ed. Cartwright, Thomas, a learned and eminent Puritan divine; born in Herts about 1535. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he became a fellow in 1560. A few years afterward he was removed to a fellowship at Trinity College, of which he became one of the senior fellows. In 1564, when Queen Elizabeth visited the University, he appears to have distinguished himself in the disputations held before her majesty. He took his B.D. degree in 1567, and three years afterward was chosen Lady Margaret's divinity professor. He was a thorough Protestant. In his lectures he criticised the polity of the Church of England with great acuteness and learning. It was his conviction that the reformation of the Church had not gone far enough; and he advocated his views with a clearness and boldness which none could mistake. The following statement of the doctrines for which he was expelled from the University is given by Hook, in vindication of the severity with which Cartwright was treated. It will be seen that, with a fever in September, 1808. He was of German parentage, and his mind remained in "uncultured darkness until his conversion. From that day it was manifest how great a mind had thus been called forth. The improvement he made astonished his friends." His genius, eloquence, and piety soon placed him in the most important positions as a preacher, and his early death was a great loss to the Church.—Minutes of Conferences, ii, 168.

Cassia is the rendering in the Auth. Vers. of two Heb. words.

1. KIDDAH', קִדָּה, mentioned in Exod. xxx, 24 (Sept. ἴρις) among the ingredients of the holy oil of anointing, and in Ezek. xxvii, 19 (Sept. σπαρτίον) as one of the articles of merchandise in the markets of Tyre. The Sept. (in one passage) and Josephus (Ant. iii, 8, 3) have iris, i. e. some species of flag, perhaps the Iris florentina, which has an aromatic root-stock. Symmachus and the Vulg. (in one place) read stacte, "liquid myrrh." The Arabic versions of Saadias and Erpenius conjecture costus (see below). The Chaldee and Syriac, with most of the European versions, followed by Gesenius, Simon, Fürst, Lee, and all the lexicographers, understand the Arabian cassia, or cassia-bark, a species of aromatic cortical resembling cinnamon, but less fragrant and valuable; so called from its rolls being split (from קָדַר, to cleave). See Dioscor. i, 12; Theophr. Hist. Plant. ix, 5; Celsius, Hierob. ii, 186, 350 sq.

2. KETSIAH', קְצִיעָה, named only in the plural in Psa. xlv, 8 (Sept. κασία, Vulg. casia), in connection with myrrh and aloes, as being used to scent garments with. The word comes from the root קָצַע, to abrade, and appears to refer to the peeled bark of some species of cinnamon, perhaps differing in this from the preceding only as designating some oil or prepared aromatic, of which that denotes the raw material (see Celsii Hierob. ii, 369). See AROMATICS.

Under the name cassia (which appears to be identical with this last Heb. term) the ancients designated an aromatic bark derived from the East, and employed as an ingredient in costly unguents (Theophr. Plant. ix, 7; Pliny, xii, 43; Dioscor. i, 12; Diod. Sic. iii, 46; Athen. x, 449; Plaut. Curcul. i, 2, 7; Virg. Geo. ii, 466; Martial, vi, 55, 1; x, 97, 2; Pers. Sat. ii, 64; i, 36). It was obtained from a tree or shrub growing in India and Austria (Herod. iii, 110; Diod. Sic. l. c.; Agatharch. in Hudson, i, 61; Arrian, Alex. vii, 20; but see Pliny, xii, 41), which Pliny (xiii, 43) more closely, but still not adequately describes, and which Columella (iii, 8) saw in Roman fancy gardens. It is clear that the Latin writers by the term casia understood both the Oriental product now under consideration, as well as some low, sweet herbaceous plant, perhaps the Daphne gnidium, Linn. (see Fee, Flore de Virgile, p. 32, and Du Molin, Flor. Poet. Ancienne, p. 277); but the Greek word, which is first used by Herodotus (ii, 86), who says (iii, 110) the Arabians procured it from a shallow lake in their country, is limited to the Eastern product. Dioscorides (l. c.) and Galen enumerate three better sorts of cassia, and there are still in Europe held to be different kinds, but they all are distinguished from the true cinnamon-tree by their darker color, weaker odor, and less lively taste. The tree from which the bark is produced is regarded by naturalists as the Laurus cassia (Linn.), that flourishes in the East Indies and Malatia (Ainslie, Mater. Med. i, 58 sq.); yet the brothers Nees von Esenbeck (De cinnamomo disputat. Bonn, 1823, in the Botan. Zeitung, 1831, No. 34) have shown that this plant (the Laurus cassia) is not a distinct species, but only a wild or original form of the cinnamomum Ceylonicum or Zeylanicum. See the Penny Cyclopædia, s. v. Cassia; Laurus.

Laurus Kinnamomum.

The name Cassia has been applied by botanists to a genus containing the plants yielding senna, and to others, as the Cassia fistula, which have nothing to do with the original cassia. "Cassia-buds," again, though no doubt produced by a plant belonging to the same, or to some genus allied to that producing cinnamon and cassia, were probably not known in commerce at so early a period as the two latter substances. Dr. Royle, in his Antiquity of Hindoo Medicine, p. 84, has remarked, "The cassia of the ancients it is not easy to determine; that of commerce, Mr. Marshall says, consists of only the inferior kinds of cinnamon. Some consider cassia to be distinguished from cinnamon by the outer cellular covering of the bark being scraped off the latter, but allowed to remain on the former. This is, however, the characteristic of the (Cochin-Chinese) Cinnamomum aromaticum, as we are informed by Mr. Crawford (Embassy to Siam, p. 470) that it is not cured, like that of Ceylon, by freeing it from the epidermis." There is no doubt that some cassia is produced on the coast of Malabar. The name also would appear to be of Eastern origin, as kasse koronde is one kind of cinnamon, mentioned by Burmann in his Flora Zeylonica.

The Heb. word ketsiah, however, has a strong resemblance to the kooth and koost of the Arabs, of which Kooshta is said by their authors to be the Syriac name, and from which there is little doubt that the κόστος of the Greeks and costus of the Latins are derived. Κόστος is enumerated by Theophrastus (Hist. Pl. ix, 7) among the fragrant substances employed in making ointment. Three kinds of it are described by Dioscorides among his Aromata (i, 15), of which the Arabian is said to be the best, the Indian to hold the second place, and the Syrian the third. An inferior kind is termed by him κιττώ (i, 12), a word which has a strong resemblance to the Heb. kiddah above. Pliny mentions only two kinds (xv, 12), the white and the black, brought from India. The Persian writers on Materia Medica in use in India, in giving the above synonymes, evidently refer to two of the three kinds of Costus described by Dioscorides, one being called Koost Hindee, and the other Koost Arabee. Both these kinds are found in the bazaars of India, and the koot or koost of the natives is often, by European merchants, called Indian orris, i. e. Iris root, the odor of which it somewhat resembles. The same article is known in Calcutta as Puchuk, the name under which it is exported to China. The identity of the substance indicated by these various names was long ago ascertained by Garcias. The koost obtained in the northwestern provinces of India is one of the substances brought across the Indus from Lahore (Royle, Illust. Himal. Bot. p. 360). Dr. Falconer, on his journey to Cashmere, discovered that it was exported from that valley in large quantities into the Punjab, whence it finds its way to Bombay (as in the time of Pliny to Patala) and Calcutta for export to Cinnamomum Cassia, with enlarged view of the Bud.

China, where it is highly valued as one of the ingredients in the incense which the Chinese burn in their temples and private houses. He named the species Aucklandia Costus (Linn. Trans. xix, 23) (see Smith's Dict. of Class. Ant. Am. ed., s. v. Cassia; Costum). See CINNAMON.

Cassian, JULIUS (Κασσιανός), a leader of the Docetæ in the second century: Cave gives the date A.D. 174; Tillemont about A.D. 200. He is mentioned by Hippolytus and Irenæus, but what is known of him is chiefly derived from Clemens Alexandrinus, who calls him the founder of the sect of the Docetæ, and refers to one of his works, entitled Concerning Continence, from which it appears that he adopted the notions of Tatian respecting the impurity of marriage. He quoted passages from apocryphal Scriptures, and perverted passages from the genuine Scriptures in order to support his opinions. Clement says that "he had recourse to the fiction—that Christ was only a man in appearance—through unwillingness to believe that he had been born of the Virgin, or partaken in any way of generation." Clement accuses him of borrowing from Plato his notions respecting the evil nature of generation, as well as the notion that the soul was originally divine, but, being rendered effeminate by desire, came down from above to this world of generation and destruction. Eusebius (vi, 13) speaks of Cassian as author of "a history of the times in chronological order" (Clement, Stromat. iii, 13, § 91).—Lardner, Works, viii, 611–614; Neander, Church Hist. i, 458; Cave, Hist. Litt. Cent. ii; Matter, Hist. du Gnosticisme, ch. i, § 3.

Cassiānus, JOHANNES (also called JOANNES MASSILIENSIS, JOANNES EREMITA), according to Gennadius (De Vir. Illust. c. 61), a Scythian; but the more likely view makes him a native of Marseilles. He was brought up at the celebrated monastery of Bethlehem (q. v.), under Germanus, with whom, about A.D. 390, he went to visit the hermits of Egypt, among whom he lived several years. In 403 he went to Constantinople, where he listened to Chrysostom, who ordained him deacon. About 415 he founded a monastery at Marseilles for monks and another for nuns; the first is the celebrated abbey of St. Victor. He may thus be considered as the founder of monachism in the West; and his treatise De Institutis Cœnobiorum, libri xii, afforded a code by which the monasteries were long after ruled (transl. into French by Saligny, Paris, 1667, 8vo). Cassianus, according to different writers, died (aged 97) in 440, or 448, or 435. The Chronicle of Prosper represents him as alive in 433. Some churches honor him as a saint on the 23d of July, though he was never canonized. He was a strong opponent of Augustine's doctrine of predestination, but at the same time, by recognising the universal corruption of human nature, he opposed Pelagius just as strongly. (See his Collationes Patrum.) He admitted the necessity of preventing and assisting grace, but held that, in most men, faith and good will, and the desire of conversion, wrought by natural strength alone, precede such grace, and prepare the mind to receive it; and that such first efforts of the natural man cannot indeed deserve the gift of grace, but assist to the obtaining of it. "His attention was turned to experience; he observed religious natures; a system of mere logical speculation had no charms for him. His doctrines, which are scattered through his writings, were designed to represent in its simplicity the faith of the Galilean fishermen, which had been garbled by Ciceronian eloquence. Free will and grace agreed, and hence there was an opposing onesidedness which maintained either grace alone, or free will alone. Augustine and Pelagius were each wrong in their own way. The idea of the divine justice in the determination of man's lot after the first transgression did not preponderate in Cassian's writings as in Augustine's, but the idea of a disciplinary divine love, by the leadings of which men are to be led to repentance. He appeals also to the mysteriousness of God's ways, but not as concerns predestination, but the variety of the leadings by which God leads different individuals to salvation. Nor is one law applicable to all; in some cases grace anticipates (gratia prævenions), in others a conflict precedes, and then divine help comes to them as grace. In no instance can divine grace operate independently of the free self-determination of man. As the husbandman must do his part, but all this avails nothing without the divine blessing, so man must do his part, yet this profits nothing without divine grace" (Neander, Hist. Dogmas, ii, 377). Among his writings are Collationes Patrum, xxiv, in which Cassian introduces Germanus and other monks as interlocutors, with himself, in dialogues on various monastic and moral duties. In the 13th Conference, Cassian, under the person of Chæremon, sets forth what has been called his semi-Pelagianism, viz. his views of predestination and grace. The 17th Conference defends occasional falsehood, as being not contrary to Scripture: "A Lie is to be so esteemed and so used as if it possessed the nature of hellebore, which, if taken in an extreme case of disease, may be healthful, but if taken rashly, is the cause of instant death; people the most holy and most approved of God have used falsehood without blame," etc. The 20th shows several ways of obtaining remission of sins besides through the death and intercession of Christ. He wrote also a treatise, De Incarnatione Christi, lib. vii, in confutation of Nestorius, about A.D. 430, at the request of Leo, afterwards bishop of Rome. Cassian maintains the propriety of the term "Mother of God." The Collationes were translated into French by Saligny (Paris, 1663, 8vo). His works were published at Basle in 1575; at Antwerp in 1578; at Rome (cura Petri Giacconii), 1580 and 1611, 8vo; at Douai (1616, two vols. 8vo), by Alardus Gazæus; reprinted at Leipsic 1722, fol. (the best edition). They are also in the Biblioth. Patrum, vol. vii.—Neander, Church Hist. ii, 627–630; Hoefer, Nouv. Biographie Générale, ix, 35; Dupin, Eccl. Writers, 5th century; Meier, Jean Cassian (Strasb. 1840); Wiggers, de Johanne Cassiano, etc. (Rostock, 1824, 1825); Wiggers, Augustinismus et Pelagianismus, ii, 19, 47, etc.

lain (1666) and Arabic professor at Cambridge, to which were afterwards added a prebend of Canterbury and the livings of Hatfield Peverell and Wodeham Walter. He died in 1685 rector of Higham Gobion, Bedfordshire. His Lexicon is one of the greatest monuments of industry known in literature. He was aided in its preparation by Dr. Murray, bishop Beveridge, and Dr. Lightfoot. Besides his vast labors on the Lexicon, he was eminently useful to Walton in the preparation of his Polyglot Bible. Walton acknowledges his services, but not adequately.—*New General Biograph. Castellio. See CASTALION.

Castellum (or Castra) Peregrinōrum (Foreigners' Station) or PETRA INCĪSA (Cut Rock), a fortified seaport of the Crusaders in Palestine, between Mt. Carmel and Cæsarea (Ritter, Erdk. xvi, 615; Raumer, Palästr. p. 133); now ATHLIT, a most formidable-looking ruin (Van de Velde, Narrative, i, 312-314; Wilson, Lands of Bible, ii, 248). See AHLAB. Under the form Castra (קסטרה) it seems to be mentioned by the Rabbins (Reland, Palæst. p. 697; Schwarz, Palest. p. 162).

Castle is the rendering in the A. V. of the following words in certain passages: אַרְמוֹן, armon', a fortress (Prov. xviii, 19; elsewhere uniformly "palace"); טִירָה, tirah', a wall ("row," Ezek. xlvi, 23), hence an enclosure, e. g. a fortress ("palace," Cant. viii, 9), or a nomade hamlet of palisades (Gen. xxv, 16; Num. xxi, 10; 1 Chron. vi, 54; "palace," Ezek. xxv, 4; poetically "habitation," Psa. lxix, 25); בִּירָנִית, birânith' [from the synonymous בִּירָה, birah', "palace;" see BARIS], a citadel (2 Chron. xvii, 12; xxvii, 4); מִגְדָּל, migdal' (1 Chron. xxvii, 25), a tower (as elsewhere rendered); מְצָד, metsad' (1 Chron. xi, 7), or מְצוּדָה, metsudah' (1 Chron. xi, 5), a fort or stronghold (as elsewhere usually rendered); ἀκρόπολις, acropolis (2 Macc. iv, 27; v, 5); πύργος, a tower along a wall (2 Macc. x, 18, 20, 22); παρεμβωλή, a military enclosure (Acts xxi, 34, 37; xxii, 24; xxiii, 10, 16, 32) or station ("camp," Heb. xi, 34; xiii, 11, 13; Rev. xx, 9). See TOWER; PALACE, etc.

Castles among the Hebrews were a kind of military fortress, frequently built on an eminence (1 Chron. xi, 7). The priests' castles, mentioned in 1 Chron. vi, 54, may also have been a kind of tower, for the purpose of making known anything discovered at a distance, and for blowing the trumpets, in like manner as the Mohammedan imams ascend the minarets of the mosques at the present day to call the people to prayers. The castles of the sons of Ishmael, mentioned in Gen. xxv, 16, were watch-towers, used by the nomade shepherds for security against marauders. The "castle" in Acts xxi, 34, refers to the quarters of the Roman soldiers at Jerusalem in the fortress Antonia (q. v.), which was adjacent to the Temple and commanded it. See FORTIFICATION.

Cas'tor AND POL'LUX, the Dioscûri (Διόσκουροι, Acts xxviii, 11), two heroes of Greek and Roman mythology, the twin-sons of Jupiter and Leda (see Smith's Dict. of Classical Biog., s. v. Dioscuri). They were regarded as the tutelary divinities (Θεοὶ σωτῆρες) of sailors (Xenoph. Sympos. viii, 29). They appeared in heaven as the constellation of Gemini. On shipboard they were recognised in the phosphoric lights called by modern Italian sailors the fires of St. Elmo, which play about the masts and the sails (Seneca, Nat. Quæst. i, 1; comp. Pliny, xi, 37). Hence the frequent allusions of Roman poets to these divinities in connection with navigation (see especially Horace, Carm. i, 3, 2, and iv, 8, 31). As the ship mentioned by Luke was from Alexandria, it may be worth while to notice that Castor and Pollux were specially honored in the neighboring district of Cyrenaica (Schol. Pyth. v, 6). In Catull. iv, 27, we have distinct mention of a boat dedicated to them (see also lxviii, 65). In art, these divinities were sometimes represented simply as stars hovering over a ship, but more frequently as young men on horseback, with conical caps, and stars above them (see the coins of Rhegium, a city of the Bruttii, at which Paul touched on the voyage in question, verse 13). Such figures were probably painted or sculptured at the bow of the ship (hence παράσημον; see Smith, Dict. of Class. Antiq., s. v. Insigne). This custom was very frequent in ancient ship-building. See SHIP. Herodotus says (iii, 37) that the Phœnicians used to place the figures of deities at the bow of their vessels. Virgil (Æneid, x, 209) and Ovid (Trist. i, 10, 2) supply us with illustrations of the practice; and Cyril of Alexandria (Cramer's Catena, ad l. c.) says that such was always the Alexandrian method of ornamenting each side of the prow.—Smith, s. v. See DIOSCURI.

Casuistry is that branch of Christian morals which treats of casus conscientiæ (cases of conscience); that is to say, of questions of conduct in which apparently conflicting duties seem at first to perplex and disturb the moral faculty, and make it necessary to trace, with a careful exclusion of everything but moral considerations, the consequences of the rules of morality (Whewell, History of Moral Philosophy, xxiv). Kant calls casuistry "the dialectics of conscience." In this sense the word might have a good meaning; but its ordinary use is to designate sophistical perversion or evasion of the moral law. Pope supplies examples of both shades of signification, as, first, in the good sense:

> "Who shall decide when doctors disagree,
> And soundest casuists doubt, like you and me?"

Again, in the unfavorable sense:

> "Morality by her false guardians drawn,
> Chicane in furs, and casuistry in lawn."

But the theory of "collision of duties," on which this so-called science of casuistry rests, is unsound. Duty is one, though there may be various ways of performing it, and with regard to these, instruction and guidance of course may be needed. What appears to be collision of duties is generally only a collision between duty and inclination. In true Christian ethics, principles of life are set forth, not rules for individual cases. There is nothing like casuistry in the moral teaching of Christ and his apostles. If the "eye be single, the whole body will be full of light;" and if the ultimate aim of man be to do the will of God, this aim, by the aid of the divine Spirit, will clear up all special perplexities as they arise. "When truth must be dealt out in drams or scruples, the health of the soul must be in a very feeble and crazy condition." Bishop Heber tells us that when Owen was dean of Christ Church, a regular office for the satisfaction of doubtful consciences was held in Oxford, to which the students at last gave the name of "Scruple shop" (Heber's Works of Jeremy Taylor, i, 270). "The cure for diseased consciences is not to be found in a 'scruple shop,' but in the love and care of the great Physician. The law of love, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, is a solvent of all subordinate moral questions in the practice of life. For the application of this law our brought the office of such casuistry to an end. "The decision of moral questions was left to each man's own conscience; and his reponsibility as to his own moral and spiritual condition could no longer be transferred to others. For himself he must stand or fall. He might, indeed, aid himself by the best lights which the Church could supply—by the counsel of wiser and holier servants of God; and he was earnestly enjoined to seek counsel of God himself by hearty and humble prayer. But he could no longer lean the whole weight of his doubts and his sins upon his father confessor and his mother Church. He must ascertain for himself what is the true and perfect law of God. He could no longer derive hope or satisfaction from the collections of cases, in which the answer rested on the mere authority of men fallible and sinful like himself. Thus the casuistical works of the Romanists lost all weight, and almost all value, in the eyes of the Reformed churches. Indeed, they were looked upon, and justly, as among the glaring evidences of the perversions and human inventions by which the truth of God had been disfigured. But even after the sophistry and the moral perversion connected with casuistry were exploded, the form of that science was preserved, and many valuable moral principles in conformity to it delivered. The writers of the Reformed churches did not at first attempt to substitute anything in the place of the casuistical works of the Romish Church. Besides an aversion to the subject itself, which, as remarked above, they naturally felt, they were, for a considerable period after the Reformation, fully employed upon more urgent objects. If this had not been so, they could not have failed soon to perceive that, in reality, most persons do require some guidance for their consciences, and that rules and precepts, by which men may strengthen themselves against the temptations which cloud the judgment when it is brought into contact with special cases, are of great value to every body of moral and Christian men. But the circumstances of the times compelled them to give their energies mainly to controversies with the Romish and other adversaries, and to leave to each man's own thoughts the regulation of his conduct and feelings." —Whewell, History of Moral Philosophy in England (Lond. 1852, 1 vol. 8vo, p. xxviii sq.).

In the writings of the early reformers (e. g. Melancthon and Calvin) there may be found moral directions approaching to casuistry. But the first regular treatise on casuistry in the Protestant Church was Perkins, The whole Treatise of Cases of Conscience, distinguished into three Books (Lond. 1602, 1606; also in his Works, vol. ii, Lond. 1617; in Latin, Hanov. 1603; and in Perkinsii Opera, Geneva, 1624). See PERKINS. He was followed by Henr. Alstedius (Reformed), Theologia Casuum, in 1621 (Hanover, 4to); F. Balduinus, Tract. de Casibus Conscientiæ (Vitemb. 1628, 4to; Lips. 1684, 4to); Amesius (Ames, q. v.), De Conscientia, ejus jure et Casibus (Amst. 1630); Osiander, Theologia Casualis (Tübingen, 1680, 8vo). For other writers on casuistry in the Lutheran and Reformed churches, see Walch, Bibliotheca Theologica, vol. ii, cap. vi. In the Church of England we find bishop Hall, Resolutions and Decisions of divers practical Cases of Conscience (Lond. 1649, 8vo); bishop Sanderson, Nine Cases of Conscience (London, 1678, sm. 8vo); Jeremy Taylor, Ductor Dubitantium, or Rule of Conscience (Works, Heber's edition, vols. xii–xiv). To casuistry belongs also Baxter's Christian Directory, a Sum of Practical Theology (fol. 1673; and in Baxter's Practical Works, vols. ii–vi; transl. into German, Frankf. 1693, 4to). Dickson, professor at Edinburgh, had previously published Therapeutica Sacra (Latin, 1656; English, 1695), a work which Baxter lauds highly. There is still at the University of Cambridge, England, a professorship of Moral Theology or Casuistical Divinity, which was held by the late Dr. Whewell. See Whewell, Lectures on the History of Moral Philosophy in England (Lond. 1852, 8vo); Winer, Theolog. Literatur, vol. i, § xiii, d.; Herzog, Real-Encyklopädie, ii, 607, 787; Orme, Life of Baxter, vol. ii, ch. v; Hagenbach, Theolog. Encyklopädie, § 94; Ständlin, *Geschichte der theol. Casus Reservāti (cases reserved), in the Roman Church, are cases of sin such as an ordinary confessor (q. v.) cannot absolve, but only an ecclesiastic of high rank, or one specially authorized by the pope for the purpose. See Canons of Trent, sess. xiv, ch. vii.

heathen with impunity (see below). They are alluded to, however, in the Targum (at Isa. xiii, 22; Hos. ix, 6) under the name chathul', חְתוּל, Arabic chaytal. Martial (xiii, 69) makes the only mention of catta in classical writers. Bochart (Hieroz. ii, 206 sq.) thinks that by the word צִיִּים, tsiyim', in Isa. xiii, 21; xxxiv, 14; Jer. l, 39, and Psa. lxxiv, 14, some species of cats are meant; but this is very doubtful (Michaelis, Suppl. p. 2086). See BEAST. The Greek αἴλουρος, as used by Aristotle, has more particular reference to the wild cat (Felis catus, etc.). Herodotus (ii, 66) uses αἴλουρος to denote the domestic animal; similarly, Cicero (Tusc. v, 27, 78) employs felis; but both Greek and Latin words are used to denote other animals, apparently some kinds of marten (Martes). The context of the passage in Baruch appears to point to the domesticated animal. Perhaps the people of Babylon originally procured the cat from Egypt, where it was a capital offence to kill one (Diod. Sic. i, 83).—Smith, s. v. See ANIMAL WORSHIP. The Egyptians treated it as a divinity, under the denomination of Pasht, the Lunar Goddess, or Diana, holding every domesticated individual sacred, embalming it after death, and often sending it for interment to Bubastis (see Jablonski, Panth. Æg. ii, 66). Yet we find the cat nowhere mentioned in the canonical books as a domestic animal. In Baruch it is noticed only as a tenant of pagan temples, where, no doubt, the fragments of sacrificed animals and vegetables attracted vermin, and rendered the presence of cats necessary. With regard to the neighboring nations, they all had domestic cats, derived, it is presumed, from a wild species found in Nubia, and first described by Ruppel under the name of Felis maniculata. Two specimens are here given from these paintings: one clearly a cat; the other, in the original, figured as catching birds, acting like a retriever for his master, who is fowling in a boat (Wilkinson, Anc. Eg. abridgm. i, 236, 237). It is not apparently a cat, but a species of gennet or paradoxurus, one of the genera before hinted at. Both are nearly allied to the celebrated ichneumon, the herpestes of authors, the modern nems, which is even now occasionally domesticated; it differs in manners, for the herpestes pharaonis does not frequent the uplands, but willingly takes the water.—Kitto, s. v. Catabaptists (κατά, against, and βαπτιστής), a general name sometimes used to designate all who deny the necessity of Christian baptism.

Catacombs, subterranean places of burial, generally found in regions of soft and easily excavated rock, such as granular tufa. The oldest are in Egypt; others are to be found in Syria, Malta, Persia, Greece, and South America. It is likely that most of them were originally quarries, which afterwards came to be used as places of burial for the dead or as hiding-places for the living. When the word catacombs is used alone, it applies generally to those of Rome, the soil around which city is undermined in various places, and the long labyrinths thus formed are "The Catacombs." There are catacombs at Naples resembling those at Rome; and also at Palermo and Syracuse. This article is devoted entirely to the Catacombs of Rome.

I. The Word Catacombs.—The derivation of the word is uncertain. Some find it in κατά, down, and τύμβος, mound, tomb; others in κοιμάω, to go to sleep; or, as Marchi (Monum. p. 209), Lat. cumbo, part of decumbo, I lie down; others in κατά and κύμβη, a hollow, canoe, as from the resemblance of a sarcophagus to a boat (Schneider, Lex. Grec., s. v. κύμβη). The name catacombs was first applied to the underground burial-places in the sixth century; before that date they were called crypts (κρύπται, secret places); cemeteries (κοιμητήρια, sleeping-places).

II. Origin of the Catacombs.—It is likely that some, at least, of the catacombs were originally the sand-pits and quarries from which building materials for use in the city had been taken. As the Romans burned their dead to ashes, they did not bury underground; but it is believed that the bodies of slaves and of executed criminals were sometimes thrown into the old quarries. This view was formerly held by the chief Roman Catholic writers on the Catacombs, e. g. Bosio, Aringhi, and Boldetti; but of late, since the publication of Padre Marchi's great work on the monuments of Rome, the writers of that school object to this origin for any of the catacombs, and call it a Protestant calumny (e. g. Bergier, Dict. de Théologie, i, 374). But Protestants and Romanists are alike interested in getting at historical truth; nor would either class be likely to stigmatize the early Christians, the common religious ancestry of all believers. The Jews in Rome and elsewhere retained the custom of burying their dead instead of burning them; and they probably began using catacombs in the vicinity of Rome before the time of Christ, or immediately after. In the 16th century Bosio discovered a Jewish catacomb outside of the ancient Porta Portuensis; and in 1862 another was opened on the Via Appia, outside of the Porta Capena. Its form is like that of the Christian catacombs; but, instead of the Christian symbols, the seven-branched candlestick and other Jewish emblems are sculptured on the slabs that close the tombs. The Etruscans, centuries before, had made use of rock-tombs or catacombs, as seen at Civita Castellana, Falieri, and other Etruscan cities. There is nothing more likely or natural than that, in the first persecutions, the Christians should have buried their dead in excavations previously made by Pagans; that they should afterwards have enlarged these excavations; and, finally, that they should have made new ones as their necessities, in the lapse of time, demanded. It is certain that in the catacombs at Naples there are found tiers of tombs, some of which are clearly Pagan, and have Pagan symbols and inscriptions, while others are as clearly Christian. The argument, on the other hand, for the theory that the early Christians themselves excavated all the catacombs, is well stated in Martigny, Dict. des Antiq. Chrétiennes, p. 118 et seq. It certainly appears settled that many, if not most of the existing catacombs, were excavated by the Christians of the first three centuries. Their dates can be approximately ascertained by several criteria:

1. The style of some of the fresco paintings on the walls belongs to the third century, or even to the latter half of the second, while it is to be presumed that the crypts were excavated many years before the paintings were executed.

2. Some of the symbols which have been discovered belong to the earliest dates of the Christian history, and some of the coins bear the effigy of Domitian († 96), and even of earlier emperors; other inscriptions and paintings as clearly show later dates.

3. Inscriptions marked with consular dates. Among eleven thousand epitaphs in De Rossi's collection, about three hundred range from A.D. 71 up to the middle of the 4th century. For these and other reasons it is believed that the origin of the oldest Christian catacombs coincides with the dates of the earliest persecutions, e. g. that of Nero. Martigny puts in a much more doubtful argument, drawn from the burial-place of St. Peter, which, as he says, became the veritable nucleus of the Vatican catacombs. It is probable that the catacombs, such as we now know them, were all excavated before the 5th century. In that and the following century no new catacombs were dug, but the old ones were repaired; walls were built to support their roofs, and passages for light and air were opened to the surface of the ground.

III. Early Uses.—The Catacombs have served three distinct purposes:

1. As places of burial.—These underground receptacles consist of long galleries, with transverse corridors connecting them. These passages are sometimes regular for a considerable distance, but the multiplication of cross alleys and branches at last forms a labyrinth in which it is rash to venture without a guide. These galleries and corridors are of various lengths and heights, generally seven to eight feet high, and three to five wide. The roof is supported by that part of the tufa which is left between the passages, and in these walls the tombs (loculi) are excavated. In most cases the tomb is just large enough for a single corpse; in some tombs, however, two or more skeletons have been found. The number of graves in each tier depends on the height of the wall; there are commonly three to five; but even twelve are found in one instance. The tomb is closed up, either with a slab of marble (as in Fig. 3) or with large bricks (as in Fig. 2). Inscriptions and emblems are found sculptured or painted on many of the slabs (see Fig. 3) and in some cases a Constantine, to his procurator, or vicar-general (after the organization of dioceses under imperial law), whose duty it was to see that all imperial rescripts were duly carried out. So in a letter from Constantine to Eusebius (preserved in Socrates, Hist. Eccles. i, 9), the emperor says: "Letters have been sent to the διοικήσεως καθόλικόν, that he may provide all things necessary," etc. See Suicer, Thes. Eccles. s. v.

(2.) The official title of certain of the Oriental prelates, especially of the patriarchs of the Armenian Church. He is appointed head of that part of the church over which his jurisdiction extends; he only can ordain bishops and consecrate the sacred oil. The dignity of Catholicos is inferior to that of patriarch, but superior to that of metropolitan. There are three dignitaries bearing the title in the Armenian Church at present—the Catholicos of Etchmiadzin, the Catholicos of Aghtamar, the Catholicos of Sis.—Coleman, Ancient Christianity, ch. xxvii, § 2. See Armenian Church.

Cathu'ä (Καθουά), one of the family heads of the "servants of the Temple" (Nethinim) that returned from Babylon (1 Esdr. v, 30); apparently the Giddel (q. v.) of the Heb. texts (Ezra ii, 47; Neh. vii, 49).

Catlin, Jacob, D. D., a Congregational minister, was born at Hauvinton, Conn., March, 1758, and graduated at Yale, 1784. He became pastor in New Marlborough, Mass., July 4, 1787, was made D.D. by Yale in 1822, and died April 12, 1826. He published a work on theology, What is Truth? (1818); a volume, Sermons collected (1797); and a Discourse before a Free-mason's Lodge (1796).—Sprague, Annals, ii, 260.

Cattenburgh, Adrien Van, an Arminian or Remonstrant theologian, born at Rotterdam Nov. 2, 1664, and filled the professorship of theology at Amsterdam for twenty-five years. He was intimately connected with Philip Limborch. He died in 1736, leaving (1.) Spicilegium Theologiæ Christianæ Philippi a Limborch (Amst. 1726, 2 vols. fol.):—(2.) Bibliotheca Scriptorum Remonstrantium (Amst. 1727, 8vo):—(3.) Syntagma Sapientiæ Mosaicæ (ibid. 1737, 4to), against Atheists and Deists. He also wrote a life of Grotius in Dutch.—Hoefer, Nour. Biog. Générale, ix, 226.

Cattle (the representative in various passages in the A. V. of the Heb. words בְּהֵמָה, behemah', a large quadruped in general, usually "beast" [see Behemoth]; in Num. xx, 4, and Psa. lxxviii, 48, בְּעִיר, beir', grazing animals, elsewhere "beast;" so the Gr. βοσκήματα, as being fed, 2 Macc. xii, 11, or θρέμματα, from being reared, John iv, 12; most frequently and characteristically מִקְנָה, mikneh', a possession, as sometimes rendered—from the fact that Oriental wealth ["substance," Job i, 3, 10] largely consisted in this kind of property; like the Gr. κτήνη, as being possessed, 1 Macc. xii, 23; also idiomatically, שֶׂה, seh, Gen. xxx, 32; Isa. vii, 25; xliii, 23; Ezek. xxxiv, 17, 20, 22, an individual sheep or lamb, as elsewhere rendered; or צֹאן, tson, Gen. xxx, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43; xxxi, 8, 10, 12, 41, 43; Eccles. ii, 7, sheep collectively or a flock, as rendered elsewhere), in scriptural usage, embraces the tame quadrupeds employed by mankind for domestic purposes, as oxen, buffaloes, horses, sheep, goats, camels, and asses (Gen. i, 25; xiii, 2; xxxii, 13-17; Ezek. xii, 29; xxxiv, 19; Num. xx, 19; xxxii, 16; Psa. l, 10). See each of these in their alphabetical place.

The Holy Land was eminently distinguished for its abundance of cattle, to the management and rearing of which the inhabitants, from the earliest times, chiefly applied themselves, as indeed they have always constituted the principal and almost only possession of a nomade race. In this case, wealthy people were exposed to all the vicissitudes of the seasons (Gen. xxxi, 40). Moses was a shepherd during his exile, Shamgar was taken from the herd to be a judge in Israel, and Gideon from his threshing-floor (Judg. vi, 11), as were Jair and Jephthah from the keeping of sheep; Saul and David might also be mentioned. Some of the prophets were called from that employment to the prophetic dignity, as Elisha was from the plough (1 Kings xix, 19), and Amos from being a herdsman. But the tending of flocks was not confined to the men. Rachel, the daughter of Laban, kept her father's sheep (Gen. xxix, 9), and Zipporah and her six sisters had the care of their father Jethro's flocks, who was a prince or priest of Midian (Exod. ii, 16). The following account is translated from Winer, Realw. ii, 331, 394, 732. See Herd; Flock.

Bull of Palestine.

I. Neat Cattle.—These are designated collectively by the Heb. term בָּקָר, bakar'; single animals of this kind are called אֶלֶף, alluph', an "ox," or שׁוֹר, shor (Chald. תּוֹר, tor), a "bullock;" the calves are styled עֵגֶל, e'gel, often a yearling—fem. עֶגְלָה, eglah', a "heifer" (also a young cow, even when broken to the yoke, Judg. xiv, 18; Hos. x, 11); when grown, but still in full youthful vigor, פָּר, par, a steer—fem. פָּרָה, parah', a heifer (juvencus, juvenca; comp. Varro, Res Rust. ii, 5, 8). The nomadic Abrahamidæ (like the Homeric chiefs, see Feith, Antiq. Hom. p. 405) already practiced the raising of cattle (Gen. xii, 16; xviii, 7; xxiv, 35; xxxii, 5; xxxiv, 28; comp. xiii 5), and when they emigrated into Egypt still carried it on (Exod. x, 9, 24; xii, 32 sq.). In later times, also, this was a principal pursuit of the Israelites, especially in several districts of Palestine (Deut. viii, 13; xii, 21; 1 Sam. xi, 5; xii, 3; 2 Sam. xii, 2; Psa. cxliv, 14; Jer. iii, 24; v, 11; Judith viii, 6, etc.). The oxen are there somewhat small, with short horns, and a bunch of fat on the shoulders (Hasselquist, Travels, p. 180; comp. Shaw, Travels, p. 150). The finest herds and strongest bullocks were found in Bashan, beyond Jordan (Num. xxxii, 4); hence the Bashanite steers are often put metaphorically for formidable enemies (Psa. xxii, 13), while Bashanite cows are a symbol of stately women (Amos i, 4). In the district west of the Jordan, the plain of Sharon, extending to the Mediterranean Sea, afforded the finest pastures (Isa. lxv, 10; see Jerome in loc.). Even the kings had their herdsmen (1 Chron. xxviii, 29). There was great demand for neat cattle; many hundreds were yearly slaughtered in sacrifice (and these were animals of the finest quality, as among other nations, see Herod. ii, 41; Xenoph. Cyrop. viii, 31; Varro, Res Rust. ii, 5, 11; Pliny, viii, 10, etc.), others were employed for food or festive occasions (Deut. xii, 21; 2 Sam. xii, 4; Tobit viii, 21; Matt. xxiii, 4), as then generally beef (1 Sam. xiv, 32; 1 Kings xix, 21; comp. iv, 23; Neh. v, 18), and still oftener veal was a feast to the Israelites (Gen. xviii, 7; 1 Sam. xxviii, 24; Amos vi, 4; Luke xv, 23, 27, 30), it being anciently regarded as an act of wanton prodigality to slay useful agricultural beasts (compare Apollon. Rhod. ii, 655 sq.) in order to enjoy their flesh (Ælian, Var. Hist. v, 14; Anim. xii, 34; Varro, R. R. ii, 5, 6; Pliny, Hist. Nat. viii, 70; Valer. Max. viii, 1; Cic. Nat. Deor. ii, 65). See Food. The milk was used either sweet or curdled, and was made also into cheese. See Milk; Cheese; Butter. Cattle were yoked to the plough (Deut. xxii, 10; 1 Kings xix, 19 sq.; Isa. xxx, 24; Amos vi, 12; Job i, 14; comp. Judg. xiv, 18; Josephus, Ant. xii, 4, 6), likewise for draught (Num. vii, 3, 7; 1 Sam. vi, 7; 2 Sam. vi, 3, 6), and were sometimes employed for burdens (1 Chron. xii, 40; comp. Ælian, Anim. vii, 4), but especially for threshing (comp. Baba Mezia, vi, 4; Chelim, xvi, 7). See AGRICULTURE. They were driven (Judg. iii, 31; 1 Sam. xiii, 21; compare Sirach xxxviii, 25; Acts ix, 5) with a pointed stick (מַלְמָד, malmad', or דָּרְבָּן, dorban'; κέντρον or βούκεντρον, also βουπλήξ in Iliad, vi, 135, Lat. stimulus [comp. Schol. ad Pindar, Pyth. ii, 173]), an instrument employed also for horses (Ovid, Metam. ii, 127; see Schöttgen, De stimulo boum, Frcf. a V. 1717). See GOAD. During summer cattle ranged under the open sky. In the stalls (2 Chron. xxxii, 28) their fodder (Prov. xiv, 4; Luke xiii, 15) was placed in a crib (אֵבוּס, ebus'; φάτνη). Besides fresh grass and meadow-plants (Dan. iv, 29; Num. xxii, 4), meslin (בָּלִיל, belil', Job vi, 5; Isa. xxx, 24; תֶּבֶן, te'ben, Isa. xi, 7) is mentioned as provender of cattle, a mixed food, like the Roman farrago (Gesenius, Thesaur. p. 212). That salt (to gratify the appetite) was added may be inferred from Isa. xxx, 24 (see Gesenius in loc.). See SALT. Cattle were greatly annoyed by insects, and perhaps the קֶרֶץ, ke'rets (A. V. "destruction"), of Jer. xlvi, 20, indicates some sort of such noxious creature, namely, the gadfly or œstrus (see Hitzig in loc.; otherwise Gesenius in loc.). See BEEVE.

In the Mosaic law the following enactments relate especially to oxen: 1. The mouth of the threshing-cattle was not to be bound so as to prevent their eating the provender spread under them (compare Burckhardt, Proverbs, p. 67). See MUZZLE. Hence the term "threshing oxen" sometimes stands for fat or well-conditioned animals (Jer. l, 11; see Rosenmüller in loc.). 2. Whoever stole and then sold or slaughtered an ox must give five oxen in satisfaction (Exod. xxii, 1); but if the animal was found alive in the possession of the thief, he was merely required to make double restitution (Exod. xxii, 4). See THEFT. 3. Whoever met an ox that had fallen or strayed was under obligation immediately to help it up and bring it back to the owner (Exod. xxiii, 4; Deut. xxii, 1, 4), an injunction the more needful in a country not only thinly inhabited, but intersected by many desert tracts. See PALESTINE. 4. An ox and an ass must not be yoked together to the plough (Deut. xxii, 10). This prohibition is evidently akin to those relating to heterogeneous combinations, although Michaelis (Mos. Recht, iii, 149) gives it another interpretation. See DIVERSE. Respecting unruly cattle (Exod. xxi, 28 sq.), see DAMAGES. It was considered unmerciful to take the only beast of a widow in pawn (Job xxiv, 3). See DEBT. On the subject generally, see Bochart, Hieroz. i, 268 sq.; Ugolino, De Re Rust. Hebr. (in his Thesaur. xix), ii, 9 sq. For the symbolical worship of the young bull, see CALF, GOLDEN. Compare BEAST.

II. Small Cattle: 1. Sheep.—These are designated collectively by צֹאן, tson (a general term, like μῆλον and pecus, including also goats), singly by שֶׂה, seh; while רָחֵל, rachel', means ewe; אַיִל, a'yil, wether (Chald. דְּכַר, dekar'); כַּר, kar, a fat pasture lamb; כֶּבֶשׂ, ke'bes, a lamb of one to three years (comp. Gesen. Thes. p. 659); טָלֶה, taleh' (or טָלֵא, teli'), a suckling or milk-lamb; מִשְׁנִים, mishnim' ("fatlings," 1 Sam. xv, 9), is an obscure term, possibly signifying two-year-old lambs (oves secundarias, Columella, Res Rust. vii, 3; comp. Bochart, Hieroz. i, 469). Next to neat herds, sheep formed the most important staple of Oriental nomadic pursuits in Aramæa (Gen. xxix, xxx) and Palestine (Gen. xii, 16; xiii, 5; xx, 14; xxi, 27; xxiv, 35; xxxii, 5; xxxiv, 28), as in Egypt (Gen. xlvii, 17; Exod. ix, 3), Arabia Petræa and Deserta (Exod. ii, 16, 19; iii, 1; Num. xxxi, 32; Isa. xxxiv, 6; lx, 7), and Moabitis (2 Kings, iii, 4; Isa. xvi, 1). In military feuds between such tribes, we always find sheep mentioned among the booty of the victors (Num. xxxi, 32; Jos. vi, 21; 1 Sam. xiv, 32; xv, 3 sq.; xxvii, 9; 1 Chron. v, 21, etc.). The same is still universally true of modern Bedouin Arabs, whose traffic in sheep (comp. Ezek. xxvi, 21) is their leading mark of prosperity and even opulence (comp. Arvieux, iii, 132). The patriarchs had large flocks of sheep in Palestine, as later in Egypt or Goshen (Exod. x, 9, 24; compare Hengstenberg, Pent. p. 5 sq.); also upon the occupation of Canaan by the Israelites, sheep-breeding continued to be the chief employment of a large part of the population down to the latest period, being carried on amid the numerous open tracts and hills of the country (Isa. vii, 25), many of which were productive of saline plants (comp. Deut. vii, 13; viii, 13; xxviii, 4; Judg. vi, 4; 1 Sam. xxii, 19; 2 Sam. xii, 2; Prov. xxvii, 23; Eccl. ii, 7; Jer. iii, 24; v, 17; Hos. v, 6; Joel i, 18; Judith viii, 6, etc.). There were rich owners of flocks (1 Sam. xxv, 2; 2 Sam. xii, 2; comp. Job i, 3; xlii, 12), and even kings had their shepherds (1 Chron. xxvii, 31; Amos vii, 1; compare 2 Chron. xxxii, 28), from whom they derived a revenue of sheep and wool as presents (2 Sam. xvii, 29; 1 Chron. xii, 40) or tribute (2 Kings iii, 4; Isa. xvi, 1). Among the regions most favorable for sheep-rearing are mentioned the plain of Sharon (Isa. lxv, 10), Mt. Carmel (Mic. vii, 14), Bashan (Ezek. xxxix), and Gilead (Mic. l. c.). The sheep in the patriarchal age were tended oftentimes by the daughters of the owners (Gen. xxix, 9; compare Exod. ii, 16); later by overseers or hired men (John x, 12); sometimes by the sons of the family (1 Sam. xvi, 11; xvii, 15). See SHEPHERD. The keepers gave their sheep, especially the bell-wethers, regular names (John x, 3; compare Theocr. v, 102 sq.; Aristot. Anim. vi, 16; Longin. Pastor. v, 17 and 19), and familiarized these animals with their voice so as to follow them (comp. 2 Sam. xii, 2). The sheep roamed all summer in the open air, being folded only at night (Num. xxxii, 16; 2 Chron. xxxii, 28) in a pen (גְּדֵרָה, gederah'; Talmud, דּוֹר), where, in exposed positions, they were guarded by sentries (Luke ii, 8). In the daytime they appear to have been sometimes sheltered from the heat of the sun in caverns (חֳרָמִים, Zeph. ii, 6; which, however, according to others, signifies only pits, i. e. cisterns for watering the sheep). Shepherds' dogs were indispensable (Job xxx, 1). Of the young, which sheep bear twice a year, the autumn lambs were considered the more vigorous (Varro, Res Rust. ii, 2, 18; Colum. R. R. vii, 3; Pliny, viii, 72; comp. Hamaker, Miscell. Phœnic. p. 117 sq.). The flesh of the sheep, especially that of wethers and lambs, was, as with modern Arabs (Wellsted, Trav. p. 121), a highly esteemed food (1 Sam. xxv, 18; Isa. xxii, 13; Amos vi, 4; Tobit vii, 9; viii, 21), and was essential to a well-spread board (1 Kings iv, 23; Neh. v, 18). The milk of sheep was also an article of culinary use (Deut. xxxii, 14; comp. Diod. Sic. i, 18; Pliny xxviii, 33; Strabo, xvii, 825; Colum. R. R. vii, 2; Dioscor. ii, 75). Sheep, especially lambs and rams (q. v.), were a prominent animal in sacrifices (q. v.), and a stock of them was often sacrilegiously offered for sale in the Jewish temple (John ii, 14). The wool (צֶמֶר, tse'mer, or גֵּז, gez), which, on account of the pasturing of the flock under the open sky, attained a high degree of fineness (as in Spain), was wrought into garments (Lev. xiii, 47; Deut. xxii, 11; Ezek. xxxiv, 3; Job xxxi, 20; Prov. xxvii, 26; xxxi, 13), and the Israelites were obliged to pay tithes of this product (Deut. xviii, 4). Sheep-shearing (Gen. xxxviii, 12) was a rural festive occasion (1 Sam. xxv, 4; 2 Sam. xiii, 23). As enemies of the shepherd are named the lion (Mic. v, 7), the bear (1 Sam. xvii, 34), and the wolf (Sirach xiii, 21; Matt. x, 16; John x, 12; comp. Isa. xi, 6; lxv, 25), which might easily carry off a single animal in the extensive and solitary pastures, although even this was often rescued by the sheep-tender (1 Sam. xvii, 34 sq.). See LION. The sheep were very liable also to stray in the wide pasturages (Psa. cix, 176; Isa. liii, 6; Hos. iv, 16; Matt. xviii, 12). On the "rot," or disease peculiar to flocks, see Bochart, i, 596; Aristot. Anim. ix, 3. The color of sheep is in the East generally white (Psa. cxlvii, 16; Isa. i, 18; Dan. vii, 9; Cant. vi, 5; Rev. i, 14; comp. Ezek. xxvii, 18); although black (חוּם, dusky, Gen. xxx, 32) ones are also found (Colum. R. R. vii, 2; Pliny, viii, 73; comp. Wellsted, i, 213; Ruppell, Abyssin. ii, 21), as well as spotted and grizzled (Gen. xxx, 32), peculiarities which shepherds knew how to produce artificially (Gen. xxx, 37 sq.; Strabo, x, 449; Pliny, xxxi, 9; comp. Rosselini, Monum. Civil. i, 246). See JACOB. A peculiar species of sheep (Ovis laticaudata, Linn.) is found in the East, with a long fat tail (אַלְיָה, al'yah', Arab. alyat, A. V. "rump;" Lev. iii, 9; vii, 3; viii, 25; ix, 19) of 10 to 15, and sometimes 40 to 50 pounds' weight, turned up at the end, and often drawn by the animal upon a board or small two-wheeled cart (Herod. iii, 113; Aristot. Anim. viii, 28; Pliny, viii, 75; Diod. Sic. ii, 54; Ælian, Anim. iii, 3; x, 4; Olear. Persian. v, 8; Kämpfer, Amoen. p. 506 sq.; Lucas, Reise nach d. Levante, p. 183; Russel, Aleppo, ii, 8; Descript. de l'Egypte, xxiii, 197 sq.; Oedman, Samml. iv, 75 sq.; comp. Korte, Reise, p. 429; Robinson, Res. ii, 169, 180; Schubert, iii, 118). That the same contrivance was customary with the Jews may be seen from the Mishna (Shabb. v, 4). This kind of sheep is farther distinguished from the common species of the Bedouins by its turned-up nose, and long, pendent ears. On the Mosaic enactments respecting the rights of property in sheep (Exod. xxii; Deut. xxii), see above. Compare generally Bochart, Hieroz. i, 451 sq.; Michaelis, Verm. Schrift. i, 118 sq. In Dan. viii the Persian empire (king) is personified by a ram. See PERSIA. On this figure (which represents the subjects as a flock), see Lengerke, Daniel, p. 365 sq. Compare SHEEP.

2. Goats.—This kind of stock is usually classed with sheep under the word צֹאן, tson, or (when a single head is intended) שֶׂה, seh, and thus associated with neat cattle, בָּקָר, bakar' (as in Hom. μῆλα, then βόες). The terms for goats individually are: יָעֵל, ez, a he-goat; שְׂעִירַת עִזִּים, seirath' izzim' (shaggy female of the goats), a she-goat; for the buck, more distinctively, there are several terms: תַּיִשׁ, ta'yish; עַתּוּד, attud'; שָׂעִיר, saïr' (more fully שָׂעִיר עִזִּים, seïr' izzim', i. e. shaggy male of the goats); צְפִיר, tseph'ir'; גְּדִי, gedi', is a collective term. Goats were reared by the early patriarchs (Gen. xv, 9; xxxii, 14; xxxvii, 31), as by the modern Bedouins; and in later times they also formed an important element (in all the hilly regions of Palestine) of agricultural wealth

Goat of Palestine (Capra Mambrica).

(comp. 1 Sam. xxv, 2; Cant. vi, 5; Prov. xxvii, 26; see Ezek. xxvii, 21). They were used not only for sacrifice, but also for food (Deut. xiv, 4; comp. Buckingham, ii, 67; Robinson, i, 342; Wellsted, p. 406), especially the young males (Gen. xxvii, 9, 14, 17; Judg. vi, 19; xiii, 15; 1 Sam. xvi, 20), as still in the East (Russel, Aleppo, ii, 23). The milk of goats was also an article of food (Prov. xxvii, 27), being more wholesome than that of sheep (Pliny, xxviii, 33; comp. Bochart, Hieroz. i, 717; Prosp. Alpin. Res Ægypt. p. 229). Goat-skins were only employed as clothing by poor persons, or such as chose to wear mean apparel (Heb. xi, 37). They were generally made into water or wine casks. See BOTTLE. Goat's hair was often the material of tent-cloth (Exod. xxvi, 7; xxxvi, 14; comp. Della Valle, Trav. i, 206; Arvieux, iii, 226; Volney, i, 303; Thevenot, iii, 196), as well as of matresses and bedding (1 Sam. xix, 13, 16; but see on this passage Kolkar, Quæst. Bibl. spec. ii, 56 sq.), and frequently of cloaks (Robinson, i, 279). See TENT; BOLSTER; CLOTHING. The goats of the nomadic Arabs are generally black; but in Syria (Russel, ut sup.; Thevenot, ii, 196; Russegger, i, 712) and Lower Egypt (Sonini, i, 329) there are found goats of a large size, like the European, with hanging ears (often a foot or more in length), and of a bright red color: this species is called Capra Mambrica. Whether the Angora goat (Capra Angorensis of Linn.) (see Hasselquist, p. 285; Tournefort, iii, 488; Schubert, i, 379), whose long, soft, silky hair is made into the well-known "camlet" stuff, was also indigenous to Palestine (Schulz, Leit. v, 28, will have it found on Lebanon), is undetermined; it is possibly that referred to in Cant. vi, 5. On the Mosaic enactment respecting the cooking of a kid in its mother's milk (Exod. xxiii, 19; xxxiv, 26; Deut. xiv, 21), see KID. The symbol of the Macedonian (Alexander's) empire by a he-goat (צְפִיר הָעִזִּים) in Dan. viii, 5 sq., may be illustrated by the epithet Ægean (Αἰγαῖος, q. d. goat-men), applied to the Greek colonies on that part of the Mediterranean Sea (comp. Justin. vii, 1, 7). See MACEDONIA. See generally Bochart, Hieroz. i, 703. On the Syrian wild goats, see IBEX. Comp. GOAT.

Caul (יוֹתֶרֶת, yothe'reth, properly a redundant part, i. e. flap, Exod. xxix, 13, 22; Levit. iii, 4, 10, 15; iv, 9; vii, 4; viii, 16, 25; ix, 10, 19) is, according to the Septuagint and Vulgate, the great lobe of the liver; the margin of our version says, "It seemeth by anatomy and the Hebrew doctors to be the midriff." The word might be rendered the lobe over the liver, although it makes a part of the liver itself, and this appears to be more applicable than the net over the liver, termed the lesser omentum. See LIVER. In Hos. xiii, 8, the Heb. word rendered "caul" of the heart is סְגוֹר (segor', literally enclosed), and means the pericardium, or parte about the heart.

The term translated "cauls" in Isa. iii,18 (שְׁבִיסִים, shebisim', literally netings, Sept. ἐμπλόκια) was perhaps a cap of network worn by females. The caps of network in the accompanying wood-cut are from a relief in the British Museum, representing singers and harpists welcoming Sennacherib on his return from conquest. Fig. 1 has the hair curiously arranged, but perhaps not in a caul. There is also in the British Museum a real cap of network for the hair, from Thebes, the meshes of which are very fine. See HEADDRESS. As to the true meaning in this passage, the versions give but little assistance. The Sept. renders ἐμπλόκια "plaited work," to which κοσύμβους, "fringes," appears to have been added originally as a gloss, and afterwards to have crept into the text. Aquila has τελαμῶνας, "belts." The Targum merely adopts the Hebrew word without translating it, and the Syriac and Arabic vaguely render it "their ornaments." It occurs but once, and its root is not elsewhere found in Hebrew. The Rabbinical commentators connect it with שֶׁבֶץ, shibbets', rendered "embroider" in Exod. xxviii, 39, but properly "to work in squares, make checker-work." So Kimchi (Lex. s. v.) explains shebisim as "the name of garments wrought in checker-work." Rashi says they are "a kind of network to adorn the head." Abarbanel is more full; he describes them as "head-dresses made of silk or gold thread, with which the women bound their heads about, and they were of checker-work." The word occurs again in the Mishna (Kelim, xxviii, 10), but nothing can possibly be inferred from the passage itself, and the explanations of the commentators do not throw much light upon it. It there appears to be used as part of a network worn as a head-dress by women. Bartenora says it was "a figure which they made upon the network for ornament, standing in front of it, and going round from one ear to the other." Schroeder (De Vest. Mul. cap. ii) conjectured that they were medallions worn on the necklace, and identified them with the Arab shomaiseh, the diminutive of shams, the sun, which is applied to denote the sun-shaped ornaments worn by Arab women about their necks. But to this Gesenius very properly objects (Jesa. i, 209), as well as to the explanation of Jahn (Archäol. I, ii, 2, 139), who renders the word "gauze veils" (Smith, s. v.). Others understand golden ornaments appended to braids of the hair behind (see Kitto's Daily Illustration in loc.). The hair of Oriental women is usually divided into a number of braids or tresses, which fall down upon the back, and to each of which is added three silken threads, each charged with small ornaments in gold, and terminating in small coins of the same metal (see Kitto, Pict. Bible in loc.; Lane, Mod. Eg. i, 59, 60; ii, 409, 410). See ORNAMENT.

Causeway (מְסִלָּה, mesillah'), a raised way (1 Chron. xxvi, 16, 18), or stairs of wood ("terrace," 2 Chron. ix, 11). In these passages it apparently refers to an ascent by steps, or a raised slope between Zion and the Temple, which in subsequent times was replaced by the bridge. In 2 Chron. ix, 4, it is called עֲלִיָּה (aliyah'), an "ascent." In most of the passages where it occurs, the former word signifies any public road, and is translated "highway."

Caussin, NICHOLAS, a French Roman Catholic divine, was born at Troyes, in Champagne, in 1583, and was received in the order of the Jesuits in 1607. He taught rhetoric for a time in different colleges, and Richelieu made him confessor to Louis XIII. He died July 2, 1651. His principal work is Cour Sainte (5 vols. 12mo, The Holy Court, transl. by Sir Thomas Hawkins, Lond. 1663, fol.). It had great success from the style of its biographies and its fervid devotion. Fuller has adopted much of its style in his Holy and Profane State. Part of it was translated into Latin, under the title Aula Impia Herodis (Col. 1644, 8vo). He published also De eloquentia sacra et humana, libri xvi (7th edit. Lugd. 1651, 4to); Symbolica Ægyptiorum sapientia, nunc post varias editiones denuo edita (Par. 1647, 4to).—Hoefer, *Nouv. Cavalier or Cavallier, JEAN, one of the chief leaders of the Camisards (q. v.), was born in 1679, at Ribaute, near Alaix, in Languedoc. He was a Protestant, and in the persecution of 1701 he fled to Geneva. When the insurrection in the Cévennes broke out in 1702 he joined the insurgents, and soon rose to command. With incredible skill and success he kept up the warfare until 1704, when he made a treaty with Marshal Villars. He then became a colonel in the king's service, and was even introduced at Versailles. Afterwards feeling himself to be an object of suspicion, he escaped, and subsequently went to Great Britain. Here he published his Mémoires, which were translated into English (Dublin, 1726, 8vo). After having commanded a regiment of Huguenot refugees at the battle of Almanza, he died, governor of Jersey, in 1740.—Smedley, Hist. of the Reform. Rel. in France, vol. iii, chap. xxv; Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, ix, 279. See CAMISARDS.

Cavallieri, GIOVANNI MICHELE, an Augustine monk of Lombardy, born at Bergamo about the end of the 17th century. He died in 1757, leaving behind him as a monument of learning and industry a work entitled Opera omnia liturgica (Aug. Vind. 1764, 5 vols. folio), containing a vast mass of information in the shape of commentaries on the decrees of the "Sacred Congregation of Rites" at Rome.—Hoefer, Nouv. Biog. Générale, ix, 284; Biog. Univ. tom. iii, p. 443.

Cavasilas. See CABASILAS.

Cave, properly מְעָרָה, meärah' (everywhere so rendered, except "den" in Isa. xxxii, 14; Jer. vii, 11; "Mearah" [q. v.], in Josh. xiii, 4); σπήλαιον ("den," except in John xi, 38); occasionally חֹר, chor (literally a "hole," as generally rendered; hence a cavern, Job xxx, 6, etc.; whence the name HORITE, i.e. troglodyte; also HAINAN, i. e. cavernous; HORONAIM, i. e. twin caves; BETH-HORON, i. e. place in the hollow), or חֹר, chur (also rendered "hole"); once מְחִלָּה, mechillah', Isa. ii, 19. Grottoes seem also to be indirectly denoted by the terms חַגְוֵי, chagwim' (refuges in the rocks, "clefts," Cant. ii, 14; Jer. xlix, 16; Obad. 3), and מְנָהֲרָה, minharah' (a fissure through which a stream flows, "den," Judg. vi, 2); both of which are combined in the Greek term ὀπή ("cave," Heb. xi, 38; "place" of water, James iii, 11). See DEN.

1. As natural Features.—The geological formation of Syria is highly favorable to the production of caves. It consists chiefly of limestone, in different degrees of density, and abounds with subterranean rivulets. The springs issuing from limestone generally contain carbonate of lime, and most of them yield a large quantity of free carbonic acid upon exposure to the air. To the erosive effect upon limestone rocks of water charged with this acid the formation of caves is chiefly to be ascribed (Enc. Metropol. art. Geology, p. 692, 693). Many of these have also been artificially enlarged and adapted to various purposes both of shelter and defence (Page, Text-Book of Geology, p. 141; Kitto, Phys. Geogr. of Pal. p. 72). This circumstance has also given occasion to the use of so large a number of words as are employed in the Scriptures to denote caves, holes, and fissures, some of them giving names to the towns and places and their neighborhood (Gen. xiv, 6; xxxvi, 21; Deut. ii, 12; Job xxx, 6; comp. Strabo, i, 42; xvi, 775, 776; see Burckhardt, Syria, 410; Robinson, ii, 424; Stanley, Sinai and Palest. Append. § 68–71). The subordinate strata of Syria, sandstone, chalk, basalt, natron, etc. favor the formation of caves; consequently the whole region abounds with subterranean hollows of different dimensions. Some of them are of immense extent; these are noticed by Strabo, who speaks of a cavern near Damascus capable of holding 4000 men (xvi, p. 1096, edit. 1707). This cavern is shown to the present day. Modern travels abound with descriptions of the caves of Syria. The Crusade writers record the local traditions respecting them current in their times (William of Tyre; Quaresmius, Elucid. Ter. Sanc.). Tavernier (Voyage de Perse, part ii, chap. iv) speaks of a grotto between Aleppo and Bir which would hold near 3000 horse. Maundrell has described a large cavern under a high rocky mountain, in the vicinity of Sidon, containing 200 smaller caverns (Travels, p. 158, 159). Shaw mentions the numerous dens, holes, and caves in the mountains on the sea-coast, extending through a long range on each side of Joppa. An innumerable multitude of excavations are found in the rocks and valleys round Wady Musa, which were probably formed at first as sepulchres, but afterwards inhabited, like the tombs of Thebes (Robinson's Researches, ii, 529). Other excavations occur at Deir Dubbân (ii, 353); others in the Wady leading to Santa Hanneh (ii, 395). "In the mountains of Kûl'at Ibn Ma'an, the natural caverns have been united by passages cut in the rocks, in order to render them more commodious habitations. In the midst of these caverns several cisterns have been built; the whole would afford refuge for 600 men" (Burckhardt's Travels, p. 331). Almost all the habitations at Om-keis (Gadara) are caves (Burckhardt, p. 273). An extensive system of caves exists between Bethlehem and Hebron (Irby and Mangles, p. 103).

2. Scriptural Notices.—(1.) The first mention of a cave in Scripture relates to that into which Lot and his two daughters retired from Zoar, after the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. xix, 30). It was some cavern in the mountains of Moab, but tradition has not fixed upon any of the numerous hollows in that region. See ZOAR.

(2.) The next is the cave of Machpelah, in the field of Ephron, which Abraham purchased of the sons of Heth (Gen. xxv, 9, 10). There Abraham buried Sarah, and was himself afterwards buried; there also Isaac, Rebekah, Leah, and Jacob were buried (Gen. xlix, 31; l, 13). The cave of Machpelah is said to be under the Mohammedan mosque at Hebron, surrounded by a high wall called the Haram; but even the Moslems are not allowed to descend into the cavern (Benj. of Tudela, Early Trav. p. 86; Stanley, p. 149). The tradition that this is the burial-place of the patriarchs is supported by an immense array of evidence (Robinson, Researches, ii, 433–440). See MACHPELAH.

(3.) The situation of the cave at Makkedah, into which the five kings of the Amorites retired upon their defeat by Joshua, and into which their carcasses were ultimately cast, is not known (Josh. x, 16, 27). It is thought by many that the cave of Makkedah can hardly be the one to which tradition has assigned the name (Irby and Mangles, p. 93); for, though it is not necessary to suppose that the cave was close to the town of Makkedah, yet the situation of the great caverns both at Beit Jibrîn and at Deir Dubbân in neither case agrees with that of Makkedah as given by Eusebius, eight miles from Eleutheropolis (Reland, p. 885; Robinson, ii, 352, 397; Stanley, p. 211). See MAKKEDAH.

(4.) The cave of Adullam, to which David retired to avoid the persecutions of Saul (1 Sam. xxii, 1, 2), and in which he cut off the skirt of Saul's robe (1 Sam. xxiv, 4). This, according to tradition, is an immense natural cavern at the Wady Khureitun, which passes below the Frank mountain. The site assigned by Eusebius to Adullam, 10 m. E. of Eleutheropolis, agrees little with that of this cave, which in some respects agrees with the Scripture narrative better than the neighborhood of Deir Dubbân, assigned to it by Mr. Stanley (see 1 Sam. xx, 6, and particularly xxii, 3, 4; Josephus, Ant. vi, 12, 3; Reland, p. 549; Irby and Mangles, p. 103; Robinson, ii, 175; Stanley, p. 259). See ADULLAM.

Caves along the Upper Jordan.

(5.) The cave at Engedi, which afforded a retreat to David and his followers (1 Sam. xxiii, 29; xxiv, 1), can be clearly identified. The place is now called 'Ain-Tidy by the Arabs, which means the same as the Hebrew, namely, "The Fountain of the Kid." "On all sides the country is full of caverns, which might serve as lurking-places for David and his men, as they do for outlaws at the present day. The whole scene is drawn to the life" (Robinson, ing wood, especially box-wood, with ivory, tortoise-shell, etc. (Virg. Aen. x, 137). However, Celsius (Hierob. i, 80) and Sprengel (Hist. Rei Herb. i, 267) identify the sherbin with the Pinus cedrus (Linn.), the cedar of Lebanon. See BOX-TREE.

If, on the other hand, we consider some of the remaining passages of Scripture, we cannot fail to perceive that they forcibly apply to the cedar of Lebanon, and to the cedar of Lebanon only. Thus, in Psa. xcii, 12, it is said, "The righteous shall flourish like a palm-tree, and spread abroad like a cedar of Lebanon." But Ezekiel (chap. xxxi) is justly adduced as giving the most magnificent, and, at the same time, the most graphic description of this celebrated tree (comp. Homer, Il. xiii, 389; Virgil, Æn. ii, 626; v, 447; Horace, Od. iv, 6). The other principal passages in which the cedar is mentioned are 1 Kings iv, 33; 2 Kings xix, 23; Job xl, 17; Psalms xxix, 5; lxxx, 10; civ, 16; cxlviii, 9; Cant. i, 17; v, 15; viii, 9; Isa. ii, 13; ix, 10; xiv, 8; xxxvii, 24; xli, 19; xliv, 14; Jer. xxii, 7, 14, 23; Ezek. xvii, 3, 22, 23; Amos ii, 9; Zeph. ii, 14; Zech. xi, 1, 2; and in the Apocrypha, Ecclus. xxiv, 13; l, 12. See TREE.

The conditions to be fulfilled in order to answer all the descriptions in the Bible of a cedar-tree are that it should be tall (Isa. ii, 13), spreading (Ezek. xxxi, 3), abundant (1 Kings v, 6, 10), fit for beams, pillars, and boards (1 Kings vi, 10, 15; vii, 2), masts of ships (Ezek. xxvii, 5), and for carved work, as images (Isa. xliv, 14). To these may be added qualities ascribed to cedar-wood by profane writers. Pliny speaks of the cedar of Crete, Africa, and Syria as being most esteemed and imperishable. In Egypt and Syria ships were built of cedar, and in Cyprus a tree was cut down 120 feet long and proportionately thick. The durability of cedar was proved, he says, by the duration of the cedar roof of the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, which had lasted 400 years. At Utica the beams, made of Numidian cedar, of a temple of Apollo had lasted 1178 years! (Pliny, Hist. Nat. xiii, 5; xvi, 40). Vitruvius (ii, 9) speaks of the antiseptic properties of the oil of cedar (comp. Josephus, Ant. viii, 5, 2; Sandys, Travels, p. 163, 167). The corresponding Arabic word, arz, is used to express not only the cedar of Lebanon, but also at Aleppo the Pinus sylvestris, which is abundant both near that city and on Lebanon. A similar statement will apply also to the Thuja articulata of Mount Atlas, which is called by the Arabs el-arz, a name that led to the mistake as to the material of the Cordova roof from its similarity to the Spanish alerce (Niebuhr, Descr. de l'Arabie, p. 131, etc., and Questions, xc, 169, etc.; Pliny, H. N., xiii, 11, 15; Hay, West Barb. c. iv, 49; Gesenius, Thes. p. 148). Besides the trees which belong to the one grove, known by the name of "the Cedars," groves and green woods of cedar are found in other parts of the range (Buckingham, Travels among the Arabs, p. 468; Eng. Cyclopædia, s. v. Syria; Robinson, new ed. of Res. iii, 593; Burckhardt, Syria, p. 19; Loudon, Arboretum, iv, 2406, 2407; Celsius, Hierobotan. i, 89; Belon, Obs. de arboribus coniferis, ii, 162, 165, 166). The remains of wood used in the Nineveh palaces were supposed by Layard to be cedar, a supposition confirmed by the inscriptions, which show that the Assyrian kings imported cedar from Lebanon. This wood is now proved by microscopic examination to be yew (Layard, Nin. and Bab. p. 356, 357; Loudon, ut sup. p. 2431). See FIR.

2. The modern CEDAR OF LEBANON is well known to be a widely-spreading tree, generally from 50 to 80 feet high, and, when standing singly, often covering a space with its branches the diameter of which is much greater than its height. The horizontal branches, when the tree is exposed on all sides, are very large in proportion to the trunk, being disposed in distinct layers or stages, and the distance to which they extend diminishes as they approach the top, where they form a pyramidal head, broad in proportion to its height. The branchlets are disposed in a flat, fan-like manner on the branches (see Shelby, Forest Trees, p. 522). The leaves, produced in tufts, are straight, about one inch long, slender, nearly cylindrical, tapering to a point, and are on short footstalks. The male catkins are single, solitary, of a reddish hue, about two inches long, terminal, and turning upwards. The female catkins are short, erect, roundish, and rather oval; they change after fecundation into oval oblong cones, which, when they approach maturity, become from 2½ inches to 5 inches long. Every part of the cone abounds with resin, which sometimes exudes from between the scales. As its leaves remain two years on the branches, and as every spring contributes a fresh supply, the tree is an evergreen, in this resembling other members of the fir family, which, the larches excepted, retain the same suit for a year or upwards, and drop the old foliage so gradually as to render the "fall of the leaf" in their case imperceptible. As far as is at present known, the cedar of Lebanon is confined in Syria to one valley of the Lebanon range, viz. that of the Kedisha River, which flows from near the highest point of the range westward to the Mediterranean, and enters the sea at the port of Tripoli. The grove is at the very upper part of the valley, about 15 miles from the sea, 6000 feet above that level, and their position is moreover above that of all other arboreous vegetation. Belon, who traveled in Syria about 1550, found the cedars about 28 in number, in a valley on the sides of the mountains. Rauwolf, who visited the cedars in 1574, "could tell no more but 24, that stood round about in a circle; and two others, the branches whereof are quite decayed from age." De la Roque, in 1688, found but 20. Maundrell, in 1696, found them reduced to 16; and Dr. Pococke, who visited Syria in 1744 and 1745, discovered only 15. "The wood," he says, "does not differ from white deal in appearance, nor does it seem to be harder. It has a fine smell, but is not so fragrant as the juniper of America, which is commonly called cedar, and it also falls short of it in beauty." M. Lamartine, in 1832, says, "These trees diminish in every succeeding age. There are now but 7. These, however, from their size and general appearance, may fairly be presumed to have existed in biblical times. Around these ancient witnesses of ages long since past there still remains a little grove of yellow cedars, appearing to me to form a group of from 400 to 500 trees or shrubs. Every year, in the month of June, the inhabitants of Beshierai, of Eden, of Kandbin, and the other neighboring valleys and villages, climb up to these cedars and celebrate mass at their feet." Dr. Graham gives the following measurements of the twelve largest cedars: the circumferences of the trunk at the base respectively 40 feet, 38, 47, 18½, 30, 22½, 28, 25½, 33½, 29½, 22, 29¾; the largest having thus a diameter of nearly 16 feet (Jordan and the Rhine, p. 26). Within a few years past a chapel has been erected there (Robinson, Later Res. p. 590, 591; Stanley, Sinai and Pal. p. 140). See Trew's treatises, Cedror. Libani Hist. and Apologia de cedro Lib. (Norimb. 1757 and 1767); Penny Cyclop. s. v. Abies; Thomson, Land and Book, i, 232 sq.; especially Dr. Hooker, in the Nat. History Review, Jan. 1862, p. 11–18; and Mr. Jessup, in the Hours at Home, March and April, 1867.

Ce'dron, the name of a place and of a rivulet.

1. (ἡ Κεδρών v. r. Κεδρώ.) A place fortified by Cendebæus, under the orders of king Antiochus (Sidetes), as a station from which to command the roads of Judæa (1 Macc. xv, 39, 41; xvi, 9). It was not far from Jamnia (Jabneh), or from Azotus (Ashdod), and had a winter-torrent or wady (χειμάρρους) on the eastward of it, which the army of the Maccabees had to cross before Cendebæus could be attacked (xvi, 5). These conditions are well fulfilled in the modern place Katra or Kûtrah, which lies on the maritime plain below the river Rubin, and three miles south-west of Akir (Ekron). Schwarz (Palest. p. 119) gives the modern name as Kadrûn, but this wants confirmation. Ewald (Isr. Gesch. iv, 390, note) suggests Tell-Turmus, five or six miles farther south. The Syriac has Hebron, and the Vulg. Gedor, which some compare with the village Gedrus (Κέδρος), mentioned by Eusebius and Jerome (Onomast. s. v. Γεδούρ, Gædur) as lying ten miles from Diopolis, toward Eleutheropolis.

2. In this form is given in the N. T. the name of the brook Kidron (נַחַל קִדְרוֹן = "the black torrent") in the ravine below the eastern wall of Jerusalem (John xviii, 1). Lachman, with codices A and D, has χειμάρρους τοῦ Κεδρών; but the Rec. Text with B has τῶν Κέδρων, i. e. "the brook of the cedars" (so, too, the Sept. in 2 Sam. xv, 23). Other MSS. have the name even so far corrupted as τοῦ κέδρου (so ℵ), cedri, and τῶν ξύλων. The word, however, has no connection with "cedar." In English, the name in this form is often erroneously pronounced (as if written Kedron) with a hard C.—Smith, s. v. See KIDRON.

Cei'lan (Κιλάν, Vulg. Ciaso), a person named (1 Esdr. v, 15) as the family head (in connection with Azetas) of seventy-seven Israelites who returned from Babylon; but the Heb. texts (Ezra ii, 16; Neh. vii, 21) do not contain either name.

Ceiling. There are three Heb. words employed in the Old Test. which our translators have rendered "ceiled" or "ceiling." 1. חָפָה (chaphah', to cover or overlay, as it is elsewhere rendered) occurs 2 Chron. iii, 5, where it is said, "He ceiled the greater house with fir-tree." 2. סָפַן (saphan', to wainscot or plank; elsewhere rendered "cover," once "seat," Deut. xxxiii, 21) occurs Jer. xxii, 14: "It is ceiled with cedar, and painted with vermilion." Houses finished in this manner were called "ceiled houses" (Hag. i, 4). The "ceiling" of the walls itself is likewise spoken of (סִפּוּן, sippun', 1 Kings vi, 15). In Ezek. xli, 16, the word rendered "ceiled" is שָׁחַף (shachîph', from being hewed thin), a board simply, used for that purpose. These ceilings were adorned with ornaments in stucco, with gold, silver, gems, and ivory. Oriental houses appear to have been the reverse of such as we inhabit, the ceiling being of wood richly ornamented and painted, and the floor plaster or stucco, the walls being generally wainscoted. The Egyptian monuments still exhibit elegant specimens of painted ceilings, no doubt greatly resembling those mentioned in the above texts (Wilkinson's Anc. Egypt. ii, 125). According to Mr. Layard, in the ancient Assyrian houses also "the ceilings overhead were divided into square compartments, painted with flowers or with the figures of animals. Some were inlaid with ivory, each compartment being surrounded by elegant borders and mouldings" (Nineveh, ii, 208). The following remarks are from Smith's Dict. s. v.: The descriptions of Scripture (1 Kings vi, 9, 15; vii, 3; 2 Chron. iii, 5, 9; Jer. xxii, 14; Hag. i, 4) and of Josephus (Ant. viii, 3, 2–9; xv, 11, 5) show that the ceilings of the Temple and the palaces of the Jewish kings were formed of clear planks applied to the beams or joints crossing from wall to wall, probably with sunk panels (φαρνώματα), edged and ornamented with gold, and carved with incised or other patterns (βαθυξύλοις γλυφαῖς), sometimes painted (Jer. xxii, 14). It is probable that both Egyptian and Assyrian models were in this, as in other branches of architectural construction, followed before the Roman period. See ARCHITECTURE. The construction and designs of Assyrian ceilings in the more important buildings can only be conjectured (Layard, Nineveh, ii, 265, 289), but the proportions in the walls themselves answer in a great degree to those mentioned in Scripture (Nin. and Bab. p. 642; Fergusson, Hand-book of Architecture, i, 201). Examples, however, are extant of Egyptian ceilings in stucco painted with devices of a date much earlier than that of Solomon's Temple. Of these devices, the principal are the guilloche, the chevron, and the scroll. Some are painted in blue, with stars, and others bear representations of birds and other emblems (Wilkinson, Anc. Egypt. ii, 290). The excessive use of vermilion and other glaring colors in Roman house-painting, of which Vitruvius at a later date complains (vii, 5), may have been introduced from Egypt, whence also came, in all probability, the taste for vermilion painting shown in Jehoiakim's palace (Jer. xxii, 14; Amos iii, 15; Wilkinson, i, 19). See also the descriptions given by Athenæus (v, 196) of the tent of Ptolemy Philadelphus and the ship of Philopator (ib. 206), and of the so-called sepulchres of the kings of Syria, near Tyre, by Hasselquist (p. 165). The panel-work in ceilings which has been described is found in Oriental and North African dwellings of late and modern time. Shaw describes the ceilings of Moorish houses in Barbary as of wainscot, either "very artfully painted, or else thrown into a variety of panels, with gilded mouldings and scrolls of the Koran intermixed" (Trav. p. 208). Mr. Porter describes the ceilings of houses at Damascus as delicately painted, and in the more ancient houses with "arabesques", encompassing panels of blue, on which are inscribed verses and chapters of the Koran in Arabic; also a tomb at Palmyra, with a stone ceiling beautifully panelled and painted (Damascus, i, 34, 37, 57, 60, 232; comp. Deut. vi, 9; see also Lane's Mod. Egypt. i, 37, 38; Thomson, Land and Book, ii, 571). Many of the rooms in the Palace of the Moors at the Alhambra were ceiled and ornamented with the richest geometrical patterns. The ancient Egyptians used colored tiles in their buildings (Athen. v, 206; Wilkinson, ii, 287). The like taste is observed by Chardin to have prevailed in Persia, and he mentions beautiful specimens of mosaic, arabesque, and inlaid wood-work in ceilings at Ispahan, at Koom in the mosque of Fatima, and at Ardevil. These ceilings were constructed on the ground, and hoisted to their position by machinery (Chardin, Voyage, ii, 434; iv, 126; vii, 387; viii, 40, plate 39; Olearius, p. 241). See HOUSE.

Ceillier, DOM RÉMY, an eminent French theologian, was born at Bar-le-Duc in 1688. He entered the order of St. Benedict in 1705, and became titular prior of Flavigny. In 1718 he published, Apologie de la morale des Pères de l'Église, contre Jean Barbeyrac; but the work of his life was his Histoire Générale des Auteurs Sacrés et Ecclésiastiques (1729–1763, 23 vols. 4to)—a work more complete, and perhaps more accurate than that of Dupin, although inferior to him in the analysis of books. A new edition has appeared (Paris, 1860-65, 15 vols. 8vo), with additions, but unfortunately thus far without general indexes. The chief superiority of Ceillier over Dupin lies in his treatment of the writers of the first six centuries, in which he had the use of Tillemont, and also of the Benedictine editions of the fathers. In the Middle Ages, and especially in the scholastic theology, for which he had no taste, he does not equal Dupin. Ceillier died Nov. 17, 1761.—Biog. Universelle, s. v.

Ceimeliarchæ (κειμηλιάρχαι, keepers of the sacred vessels), a class of inferior officers in the ancient church. They had charge of all utensils and precious things laid up in the sacred repository of the church. The name sceuophylax is used in the same signification; also chartophylax, or custos archivorum, custodian of the rolls or archives (Suicer, Thesaurus, ii, 971). This officer was commonly a presbyter; Macedonius was both presbyter and sceuophylax of the church of Constantinople; and Sozomen styles Theodore, presbyter of Antioch, who suffered martyrdom in the days of Julian, φύλακα τῶν κειμηλίων, "keeper of the sacred utensils." He was put to death because he would not deliver up what he had in his custody. In the Greek Church the chartophylax acts as the patriarch's substitute, excommunicating and licensing presbyters and deacons, and sitting as supreme ecclesiastical judge in many cases.—Bingham, Orig. Eccl. bk. iii, ch. xiii, § 3; Sozomen, Hist. Eccl. v, 8.

Celestine (or CŒLESTIN) I, Pope, a Roman by birth, was elected Pope in 422, on the death of Boniface I. During his pontificate the Council of Ephesus, against Nestorius, was held, upon which occasion he wrote several letters to the Eastern churches. He claimed authority and primacy in the Roman See, and sought to exercise it over the African Church in vain. In the Nestorian dispute above mentioned he was more successful, as Cyril, in order to put down Nestorius, accepted the authority of Celestine against him. He left thirteen letters; among them is a complaint as to the dress of bishops; but it is doubtful whether it means that the clergy should dress like the laity, or should abstain from some special garment which some had adopted. He died March 25 (or July 26), 432. Celestine is said to have sent Palladius and St. Patrick as missionaries to Ireland, but the story is very doubtful. It is not clear that either of them ever had any connection with Rome. His letters are preserved in the Collection of Councils. He is counted among the saints of the Church of Rome.—Biog. Univ. vii, 497; Cormenin, Lives of the Popes, i, 79.

II. Pope, originally Guido, of Città di Castello, in Tuscany, studied under Abelard, and succeeded Innocent II September 25th, 1143. He died in March, 1144.

III. Pope, a Roman named Iacinto Orsini, cardinal of Santa Maria, was elected Pope March 30, 1191, at eighty-five. He crowned Henry V and his wife Constance, and made a great display of arrogance in doing it; entered warmly into the scheme for delivering the Holy Land, on which account he espoused the cause of Richard I of England, and fulminated censures against Leopold of Austria and the emperor, who detained Richard prisoner. He died January 8, 1198. During his last illness he proposed to transfer his papal authority to cardinal Colonna, to which, of course, the cardinals objected.

IV. Pope, originally called Goffredo, of the family of Castiglione, of Milan. He was elected Pope September 20, 1241, and died on the 8th of October following.

V. Pope, originally Pietro de Murrone, was born 1215 at Isernia. With a few companions he withdrew to a cave on Monte Majella, where he lived a life of extreme austerity. After a time his disciples multiplied so greatly that he was induced to form them into a new order (called first the congregation of St. Damian, but subsequently the order of Celestines), under the rule of St. Benedict. This order was confirmed by Gregory X in the Synod of Lyons, 1274. On the 15th of July, 1294, he was elected pope, and took the name of Celestine V. He proved to be too ignorant of the world and its ways, as well as of literature, for the office which he was so suddenly called upon to undertake. Feeling his unfitness, and finding that many abuses were committed in his name, he resigned Dec. 13, 1294, and retired to his solitude. He was cruelly imprisoned by from his second missionary journey; and when he wrote his epistle to the Romans, in the course of the third journey, an organized church seems to have been formed here (Rom. xvi, 1), probably a branch of that in Corinth (see Pauli, in the Miscell. Duisb. i, 51 sq.). See PHŒBE. The first bishop of this church is said (Apost. Const. vii, 46) to have been named Lucius, and to have been appointed by Paul. The distance of Cenchreæ from Corinth was seventy stadia, or about nine miles (Strabo, viii, 380; Liv. xxxii, 17; Pliny, iv, 4; Apulej. Metam. x, p. 255, Bip. ed.). Pausanias (ii, 3) describes the road as having tombs and a grove of cypresses by the wayside. The modern village of Kikries retains the ancient name, which is conjectured by Dr. Sibthorpe to be derived from the millet (κέγκρι) which still grows there (Walpole's Travels, p. 41). The site is now occupied by a single farm-house. Close to the sea, and in parts even covered by its waters, are the foundations of a variety of buildings, the plans of which may yet be traced, as the walls still remain to the height of from two feet to three feet and a half. Some traces of the moles of the port are also still visible (Leake's Morea, iii, 233-235). The following coin exhibits the port exactly as it was described by Pausanias, with a temple at the extremity of each mole, and a statue of Neptune on a rock between them (see Conybeare and Howson, St. Paul, ii, 195).—Smith, s. v.

Cendebæ'us (Κενδεβαῖος), a general left by Antiochus VII (q. v.) in command (στρατηγός v. r. ἐπιστρατηγός and ὑποστρατηγός) of the sea-board (παραλίας) of Palestine (1 Macc. xv, 38 sq.) after the defeat of Tryphon, B.C. 138. He fortified Kedron (q. v.) and harassed the Jews for some time, but was afterwards defeated by Judas and John, the sons of Simon Maccabæus, with great loss (1 Macc. xvi, 1-10). The account of Josephus (Ant. xiii, 7, 3; War, i, 2, 2) is somewhat different.

Cendevia, according to Pliny (xxxvi, 26), the name of a lake from which the river Belus (q.v.) takes its rise, near Mt. Carmel (see Reland, Palæst. p. 267); probably the fountains now called Kurdany, near Shefr Amur (Thomson, Land and Book, i, 486).

Cène. See LECÈNE.

Cennick, JOHN, was originally one of Wesley's lay preachers, who appointed him as a sort of lay-chaplain at Kingswood School in 1739. In a year or two he began to preach against Wesley's Arminian doctrines, and to raise a party within the Wesleyan Society. After unavailing delays and overtures of peace, Wesley read publicly a paper declaring, "by the consent and approbation of the Band Society of Kingswood," that Cennick and his followers "were no longer members thereof." Cennick afterwards united with the Whitefield Methodists, but did not continue long with them. He became at last a Moravian. He was a good though weak man, and his subsequent earnest and laborious life shows that he deserves more lenity than has usually been accorded to him by Methodist writers. After many years of diligent labor as an evangelist, he died in 1755. His Discourses were published in 1770 (2 vols. sm. 8vo); and a new edition, with a "Life," was published in 1852 by Matthew Wilks, who says: "He possessed a sweet simplicity of spirit, with an ardent zeal in the cause of his divine Master." The well-known hymn, "Jesus, my all, to heaven is gone," was written by Cennick.—Stevens, History of Methodism, i, 155; Darling, Cyclopædia Bibliographica, i, 615.

Censer, a vessel in which incense was presented in the Temple, being used by the Jews in the daily offering of incense, and yearly on the Day of Atonement, when the high-priest entered the Holy of Holies (2 Chron. xxvi, 19; Ezek. viii, 11; Ecclus. i, 9). On the latter occasion the priest filled the censer with live coals from the sacred fire on the altar of burnt-offering, and bore it into the sanctuary, where he threw upon the burning coals the "sweet incense beaten small" which he had brought in his hand (Lev. xvi, 12, 13). In this case the incense was burnt while the high-priest held the censer in his hand; but in the daily offering the censer in which the live coals were brought from the altar of burnt-offering was set down upon the altar of incense. This alone would suggest the probability of some difference of shape between the censers used on these occasions. The daily censers must have had a base or stand to admit of their being placed on the golden altar, while those employed on the Day of Atonement were probably furnished with a handle. In fact, there are different names for these vessels. Those in daily use were called מִקְטֶרֶת (mikte'reth, occurs only in 2 Chron. xxvi, 19; Ezek. viii, 11), from קָטַר, incense; whereas that used on the Day of Atonement is distinguished by the title of מַחְתָּה (machtah', something to take fire with), or coal-pan (often "fire-pan" in the English version). We learn also that the daily censers were of brass (Num. xvi, 93) (according to the Mishna, Tamid, v, 5, in the second temple, also of silver), whereas the yearly one was of gold (Josephus, Ant. xiv, 4, 4). The latter is also said to have had a handle (Mishna, Yoma, iv, 4), which, indeed, as being held by the priest while the incense was burning, it seems to have required. It is conjectured that this distinction is alluded to in Rev. v, 8; viii, 3, where the angel is represented with a golden "censer" (λιβανωτός, from λίβανος, incense), and the twenty-four elders each with a golden "vial" (φιάλη). In the Apocrypha, silver (1 Esdr. ii, 13) as well as golden (1 Macc. i, 22) "censers" (θυΐσκη) are similarly referred to. Paul, in Heb. ix, 4, speaks of the golden "censer" as a thing which belonged to the Tabernacle, but the Greek word θυμιατήριον, which there occurs, may signify "altar of incense" (see Bleek, Comment. p. 488; Meyer, Bibeldeut. p. 7 sq.; Mynster, in the Stud. u. Krit. 1829; ii, 342 sq.). The latter of the above Hebrew words seems used generally for any instrument to seize or hold burning coals, or to receive ashes, etc. such as the appendages of the brazen altar and golden candlestick mentioned in Exod. xxv, 38; xxxvii, 23 (in which senses it seems rendered in the Sept. by ἐπαρυστρίς, ἐπαυτῆρ, or perhaps ὑπόθεμα). It, however, generally bears the limited meaning which properly belongs to the former word, viz. a small portable vessel of metal, on which the incense was sprinkled by the priest to whose office this exclusively belonged (2 Chron. xxvi, 18; Luke i, 9). Thus "Korah and his company" were bidden to take "censers," with which, in emulation of Aaron and his sons, they had perhaps provided themselves (comp. Ezek. viii, 11); and Moses tells Aaron to take "the censer" (not a, as in the A. V.), i. e. that of the sanctuary or that of the high-priest, to stay the plague by atonement. The only distinct precepts regarding the use of the censer are found in Num. iv, 14, where among the vessels of the golden altar, i. e. of incense, "censers" are reckoned; and in Lev. xvi, 12, where we find that the high-priest was to carry it (here also it is "the," not "a censer," that he is ordered to "take") into the most holy place within the vail, where the "incense" was to be "put on the fire," i. e. on the coals in the censer, "before the Lord." This must have been on the Day of Atonement, for then only was that place entered. Solomon prepared "censers of pure gold" as part of the same furniture (1 Kings vii, 50; 2 Chron. iv, 22). Possibly their general use may be explained by the imagery of Rev. viii, 3, 4, and may have been to take up coals from the brazen altar, and convey the incense while burning to the "golden altar," or "altar of incense," on which it was to be offered morning and evening (Exod. xxx, 7, 8). So Uzziah, when he was intending "to burn incense upon the altar of incense," took "a censer in his hand" (2 Chron. xxvi, 16, 19). See ALTAR.

Ancient Egyptian Censers.

1, Throwing incense on the flame in censer. 2. Balls of incense burning in censer; a a, Boxes for holding incense. 3, 4. Censers of different forms. 5. Box or cup for incense. 6, 7. Head of handle and pan of censers, in bronze.

These intimations help us to conclude that the Jewish censers were unlike those of the classical ancients, with which the sculptures of Greece and Rome have made us familiar, as well as those (with perforated lids, and swung by chains) which are used in the Church of Rome. It is observable that in all cases the Egyptian priests had their costly incense made up into small round pellets, which they projected successively from between their finger and thumb into the censer at such a distance that the operation must have required a peculiar knack, such as could have been acquired only by much practice. As the incense used by the Jews was made up into a kind of paste, it was probably employed in the same manner. Censorship OF BOOKS, supervision of publications by means of a preliminary examination and authorization, under Church or state law. The design of censorship has always been to hinder the publication of writings supposed to be dangerous either to the state or to religion (i. e. under Roman Catholic authority, to the Church). The practice has been defended (1) by the example given in Acts xix, 9, where the "books of curious arts" were burnt; (2) by the responsibility of the Church for the souls of the flock, liable to be destroyed by bad books; (3) by the duty of teaching, which includes the withholding of bad doctrine as well as the furnishing of good.

Before the invention of printing, it was comparatively easy to control the circulation of manuscripts, and to destroy them when thought necessary. But the discovery of that art, and the spread of the Reformation in the sixteenth century, induced stronger measures and rules on the part of the Roman Church than had been known before, in order to prevent the diffusion of heretical literature. A censorship was officially established by the bull of Leo X, May 12, 1515, commanding the bishops and inquisitors to examine all works before publication, and not to tolerate any of heretical tendencies. The Council of Trent expressly prohibited the printing or reading of heretical books in the terms following: "No one shall be permitted to print, or cause to be printed, any books relating to religion without the name of the author; neither shall any one hereafter sell such books, or even retain them in his possession, unless they have been first examined and approved by the ordinary, under penalty of anathema, and the pecuniary fine adjudged by the last Council of Lateran. And if they be regulars they shall obtain, besides this examination and approval, the license of their superiors, who shall examine the books according to the forms of their statutes. Those who circulate or publish them in manuscript, without being examined and approved, shall be liable to the same penalties as the printers; and those who possess or read them, unless they declare the authors of them, shall themselves be considered as the author. The approbation of books of this description shall be given in writing, and shall be placed in due form on the title-page of the book, whether manuscript or printed; and the whole, that is, the examination and the approval, shall be gratuitous, that what is deserving may be approved, and what is unworthy may be rejected" (Session IV). A committee was appointed to carry out this law by proper enactments, which resulted in the Index Librorum prohibitorum, or Index Expurgatorius, and in the establishment of the Congregation of the Index as a perpetual censorship. The popes sought also to obtain the assistance of the civil authorities in the carrying out of the censorship, and we find that several German states published edicts in 1524, 1530, 1541, 1548, 1567, 1577, etc. recommending a stricter control of the press. Still stricter regulations were afterwards enacted in Spain, Italy, and France. In 1522 the legate Chieregati maintained in the free town of Nuremberg that it was right to take and burn all works printed without authority, and that the printers and publishers of such works were punishable. In most Roman Catholic countries there arose a twofold censorship, that of the bishops and that of the state. In many cases the two were united into one. The process was simple: the censor or licenser read over the MS. to be printed, and, after striking out any objectionable passages, certified that the work might be printed. Hence, in old books, we see the word imprimatur (let it be printed), followed by the signatures of the authorities. In England a censorship was established by act of Parliament in 1662, 13 Char. II, c. 33: "An act for preventing the frequent abuses in printing seditious, treasonable, and unlicensed books and pamphlets, and for regulating of printing and printing-presses." This was a temporary act, renewed from time to time; and its renewal was refused in 1693, owing to a quarrel between the House of Commons and the licenser. Since that time there has been, generally speaking, no restriction on what any man may publish; and he is merely responsible to the law if in his publication he should commit any public or private wrong. On the Continent of Europe the censorship became generally less stringent after the conclusion of the peace of Westphalia, although Leopold I and Francis II continued to enforce it. It was abolished in Denmark in 1770; Sweden, 1809; France, 1827; Belgium, 1830; Spain, 1883; Germany and Austria, 1848. — Pierer, Universal Lexikon, s. v.; Chambers, Encyclopædia; Milton, Liberty of Unlicensed Printing; Mendham, Literary Policy of the Ch. of Rome; M'Crie, Reformation in Italy, ch. v. Censures, CHURCH (Censuræ ecclesiasticæ), the penalties by which crimes are visited by Church authority (potestas διακριτική), the scriptural authority for which is found in such passages as Tit. i, 13; iii, 10; 1 Tim. v, 20; Matt. xviii, 17, 18; John xx, 23; 1 Cor. v, 3; 2 Thess. iii, 6, 7; Gal. v, 12. These censures are, in the state churches, admonition, degradation (q. v.), excommunication (q. v.), suspension, interdict (q. v.), and irregularity (q. v.), which hinders a man from being admitted into higher orders.

"The canonists define an ecclesiastical censure to be a spiritual punishment, inflicted by some ecclesiastical judge, whereby he deprives a person baptized of the use of some spiritual things, which conduce not only to his present welfare in the Church, but likewise to his future and eternal salvation. It differs from civil punishments, which consist only in things temporal—as confiscation of goods, pecuniary mulcts or fines, and the like; but the Church, by its censures, does not deprive a man of all spirituals, but only of some in particular. This definition speaks of such things as conduce to eternal salvation, in order to manifest the end of this censure; for the Church, by censures, does not intend the destroying of men's souls, but only the saving them, by enjoining repentance for past errors, a return from contumacy, and an abstaining from future sins" (Hook, Church Dictionary, s. v.). All churches claim the right of censure. Art. 30 of the Westminster Confession is as follows: "Of Church Censures.—The Lord Jesus, as king and head of his Church, hath therein appointed a government in the hand of Church officers, distinct from the civil magistrate. To these officers the keys of the kingdom of heaven are committed, by virtue whereof they have power respectively to retain and remit sins, to shut that kingdom against the impenitent both by the word and censures, and to open it unto penitent sinners by the ministry of the Gospel, and by absolution from censures, as occasion shall require. Church censures are necessary for the reclaiming and gaining of offending brethren; for deterring of others from like offenses; for purging out of that leaven which might infect the whole lump; for vindicating the honor of Christ, and the holy profession of the Gospel; and for preventing the wrath of God, which might justly fall upon the Church, if they should suffer his covenant, and the seals thereof, to be profaned by notorious and obstinate offenders. For the better attaining of these ends, the officers of the Church are to proceed by admonition, suspension from the sacrament of the Lord's Supper for a season, and by excommunication from the Church, according to the nature of the crime and demerit of the person." In most Protestant churches, censures can only be inflicted after trial by the peers of the accused person. On the persons liable to Church censures, and the crimes for which they were inflicted in the ancient Church, see Bingham, Orig. Eccles. bk. xvi, ch. iii; and on the rightfulness of Church censures, Burnet, On the Articles, art. 33; Palmer, On the Church, ii, 277; Watson, Theol. Institutes, ii, 600 (N. Y. ed.). Census, a term that does not occur in the A. V. (although it is found in the original text of the N. T. in the Greek form κῆνσος, "tribute," Matt. xvii, 25, etc.), while the act denoted by it is several times referred to both in the Heb. and Gr. Scriptures (מִפְקָד, or מִסְפָּר, "numbering" combined with lustration, from פָּקַד, to survey in order to purge, Gesenius, Thes. p. 1120; Sept. ἀριθμός; N. T. ἀπογραφή; Vulg. dinumeratio, descriptio). See Population.

Ancient Egyptian Registration.

I. Jewish.—Moses laid down the law (Exod. xxx, 12, 13) that whenever the people were numbered an offering of half a shekel should be made by every man above twenty years of age, by way of atonement or propitiation. A previous law had also ordered that the first-born of man and of beast should be set apart, as well as the first-fruits of agricultural produce; the first to be redeemed, and the rest, with one exception, offered to God (Exod. xiii, 12, 13; xxii, 29). The idea of lustration in connection with numbering predominated also in the Roman census (Smith, Dict. of Class. Antiq. s. v. Lustrum), and among Mohammedan nations at the present day a prejudice exists against numbering their possessions, especially the fruits of the field (Hay, Western Barbary, p. 15; Crichton, Arabia, ii, 180; see also Lane, Mod. Egypt. ii, 72, 73). The instances of numbering recorded in the O. T. are as follows:

1. Under the express direction of God (Exod. xxxviii, 26), in the third or fourth month after the Exodus, during the encampment at Sinai, chiefly for the purpose of raising money for the Tabernacle. The numbers then taken amounted to 603,550 men, which may be presumed to express with greater precision the round numbers of 600,000 who are said to have left Egypt at first (Exod. xii, 37).

2. Again, in the second month of the second year after the Exodus (Num. i, 2, 3). This census was taken for a double purpose: (a.) To ascertain the number of fighting men from the age of 20 to 50 (Joseph. Ant. iii, 12, 4). The total number on this occasion, exclusive of the Levites, amounted at this time also to 603,550 (Num. ii, 32); Josephus says 603,650: each tribe was numbered, and placed under a special leader, the head of the tribe. (b.) To ascertain the amount of the redemption-offering due on account of all the first-born, both of persons and cattle. Accordingly, the numbers were taken of all the first-born male persons of the whole nation above one month old, including all of the tribe of Levi of the same age. The Levites, whose numbers amounted to 22,000, were taken in lieu of the first-born males of the rest of Israel, whose numbers were 22,273, and for the surplus of 273 a money payment of 1365 shekels, or 5 shekels each, was made to Aaron and his sons (Num. iii, 39, 51).

If the numbers in our present copies, from which those given by Josephus do not materially differ, be correct, it seems likely that these two numberings were in fact one, but applied to different purposes. We can hardly otherwise account for the identity of numbers even within the few months of interval (Calmet on Num. i; Kitto, Pictorial Bible, ib.). It may be remarked that the system of appointing head men in each tribe as leaders, as well as the care taken in preserving the pedigrees of the families, corresponds with the practice of the Arab tribes at the present day (Crichton, Arabia, ii, 185, 186; Niebuhr, Descr. de l'Arabie, p. 14; Buckingham, Arab Tribes, p. 88; Jahn, Hist. bk. ii, 8, 11; Malcolm, Sketches of Persia, xiv, 157, 159).

3. Another numbering took place 38 years afterwards, previous to the entrance into Canaan, when the total number, excepting the Levites, amounted to 601,730 males, showing a decrease of 1870. All the tribes presented an increase, except Reuben, which had decreased 2770; Simeon, 37,100; Gad, 5150; Ephraim and Naphtali, 8000 each. The tribe of Levi had increased 727 (Num. xxvi). The great diminution which took place in the tribe of Simeon may probably be assigned to the plague consequent on the misconduct of Cha'bris (Χαβρεῖς v. r. Ἀβρίς, Vulg. omits), the son of Gothoniel (ὁ τοῦ Γ.), one of the three "rulers" (ἄρχοντες) or "ancients" (πρεσβύτεροι) of Bethulia (q. v.) in the time of Judith (Jud. vi, 15; viii, 10; x, 6).

Chad, ST., bishop of York in the 7th century, was educated under Aidan at the monastery of Lindisfarne. For some years he was head of the monastery of Lestingra, Cleveland. King Oswi made him bishop of York; but as Wilfrid had before been consecrated to that see by French bishops, Chad gave it up at the suggestion of Theodore (q. v.), and was appointed to the see of Lichfield, which he held till his death, March 2, A.D. 672. His name is still preserved in the Calendar of the Church of England (March 2), and the Cathedral of Lichfield is named St. Chad's.—Churton, Early English Church, chap. iv.

Chaderton, LAURENCE, the first master of Emanuel College, Cambridge, was born at Chatterton, in Lancashire, in 1546. His parents were of the Romish religion, but the son, after studying the law, went to Cambridge, where he obtained a scholarship in Christ's College, for which his father disinherited him. In 1578 he took his degree of B.D., and was chosen lecturer of St. Clement's Church, Cambridge, where he preached many years; and such was his reputation that Sir Walter Mildmay declared that, if he would not accept the mastership of his college, the foundation should not go on. In the beginning of the reign of James I he was appointed one of the divines at the Hampton Court Conference, and he was also one of the translators of the Bible, translating from Chronicles to the Canticles inclusive. In 1612 he took his doctor's degree. He died in 1640. He wrote a Treatise on Justification, and a sermon preached at St. Paul's Cross.—Rose, New Gen. Biog. Dict. vi, 182; Hook, Eccl. Biography, iii, 545.

Cha'dias, named (1 Esdr. v, 26), in connection with Ammidioi, as one of the (?) places from which 422 persons ("they of Chadias," οἱ Χαδιασαι) returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel; but the Hebrew lists (Ezra ii, 26; Neh. vii, 30) do not contain the name.

Chæ'reas (Χαιρέας), a brother of Timotheus, the leader of the Ammonites against Judas Maccabæus (1 Macc. v, 6), who held Gazara (Jazar, 1 Macc. v, 8), where he was slain on the capture of the fortress by the Jews (2 Macc. x, 32, 37).

Chaff (properly מֹץ, mots; ἄχυρον), the refuse of winnowed grain, separated by the treeze, and consisting of husks and broken straw. It was the custom in the East to burn the chaff after winnowing. There was danger lest, after they had been separated, the chaff should be blown again among the wheat by the changing of the wind, and to prevent this they put fire to it at the windward side, which crept on and continued to burn till it had consumed all the chaff (Psa. lxxxiii, 13; Isa. v, 4; Matt. iii, 12). See AGRICULTURE.

The word rendered "chaff" in Isa. v, 24; xxxiii, 11, is חֲשַׁשׁ (chashash'), and means rather dried grass or hay. In Jer. xxiii, 28, it is תֶּבֶן (te'ben), elsewhere "straw." In Exod. v, 12, we read of קַשׁ לַתֶּבֶן, stubble for straw; so that it is not the same as stubble. It means straw cut into small portions, in which state it was mixed with the mud of which bricks were made to give it consistency. See STRAW. In 1 Kings iv, 28, mention is made of a mixed provender for horses and camels of barley and תֶּבֶן, such as the Arabs call tibn to this day. In Dan. ii, 35, the term is the Chaldee כְּעוּר (ur). See THRESHING.

Chaff in the Scriptures is a frequent emblem of abortive wickedness (Psa. i, 4; Matt. iii, 12, etc.). False doctrines are called chaff; they are unproductive, and cannot abide the trial of the word and Spirit of God (Jer. xxiii, 28). See BAPTISM OF FIRE. The carrying away of chaff by the wind is an ordinary scriptural image of the destruction of the wicked, and of their powerlessness to resist God's judgments (Isa. xvii, 13; Hos. xiii, 3; Zeph. ii, 2).

Chain (represented by several Heb. and Gr. terms). Chains of different metals appear to have been used by the ancients for various purposes, similar to those of modern times.

1. As a Badge of Office.—The gold chain (רְבִיד, rabid') placed about Joseph's neck (Gen. xli, 42), and that promised to Daniel (Dan. v, 7, named חֲמִנִיךְ, hamnik'), are instances of the first use (comp. 1 Esdr. iii, 6). In Egypt it was one of the insignia of a judge, who wore a jeweled image of Thmei or Truth attached to it (Wilkinson's Anc. Egypt. ii, 26); it was also worn by the prime minister. In Persia it was considered not only a mark of royal favor (Xenophon, Anab. i, 2, § 27), but a token of investiture (Dan. l. c.; Morier's Second Journey, p. 93). In Ezek. xvi, 11, the chain is mentioned as the symbol of sovereignty. The breastplate of the high-priest was in like manner fastened to the ephod with golden chains (Exod. xxxix, 16, 21). See ATTIRE.

2. Chains for ornamental purposes (comp. Judith x, 4) were worn by men as well as women in many countries both of Europe (Smith's Dict. of Class. Ant. s. v. Torques) and Asia (Wilkinson, iii, 375), and probably this was the case among the Hebrews (Prov. i, 9). The necklace (עָנָק, anak') consisted of pearls, coral, etc., threaded on a string; the beads were called חֲרוּזִים, charuzim', that is, perforated (Cant. i, 10, "chains," where "of gold" is interpolated). General Map of the Chaldæan and associated Empires.

(Ibrahim), Calneh (Niffer), Erech (Warka), Ur (Mugheir), Chilmad (Kalwadha), Larancha (Senkereh), Is (Hit), Duraba (Akkerkuf); but of these not fully, and of many others not at all, have the exact sites been determined, as the Accad of Genesis (x, 10); the Teredon of Abydenus (Fragm. 8); Asbi, Rubesi, etc., towns mentioned in the inscriptions. Two of these places—Ur and Borsippa—are of particular note. Of the rest, Erech, Larancha, and Calneh were in early times of the most consequence, while Cutha, Sippara, and Teredon attained their celebrity at a comparatively recent period. (See each name in its place.)

over by officers of various ranks. An enumeration of several kinds may be found in Dan. iii, 2, 3. The head officers, who united in themselves the highest civil and military power, were denominated סְגָנִים, "rulers" (Jer. li, 23, 28, 57), or אַחַשְׁדַּרְפְּנִין, "presidents" (Dan. vi, 2); those who presided over single provinces or districts bore the title of פַּחוֹת, "governors" (Hagg. i, 1; ii, 2; in Chald. פַּחֲוָתָא). The administration of criminal justice was rigorous and cruel, will being substituted for law, and human life and human suffering being totally disregarded. Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. ii, 5) declares to the college of the magi: "If ye will not make known unto me the dream, with the interpretation thereof, ye shall be cut in pieces, and your houses shall be made a dung-hill" (see also Dan. iii, 19; vi, 8; Jer. xxix, 22). The religion of the Chaldees was, as with the ancient Arabians and Syrians, the worship of the heavenly bodies; the planets Jupiter, Mercury, and Venus were honored as Bel, Nebo, and Meni, besides Saturn and Mars (Gesenius, Jesa. ii, 332 sq.). The language spoken in Babylon was what is designated Chaldee, which is Shemitic in its origin, belonging to the Aramaic branch.—Kitto, s. v. See CHALDEE LANGUAGE.

3. That the Kaldi proper, however, were a Cushite race, is proved by the remains of their language, which closely resembles the Galla or ancient language of Ethiopia. Now it appears by the inscriptions that while both in Assyria and in later Babylonia the Shemitic type of speech prevailed for civil purposes, the ancient Cushite dialect was retained, as a learned language, for scientific and religious literature. This is no doubt the "learning" and the "tongue" to which reference is made in the book of Daniel (i, 4). It became gradually inaccessible to the great mass of the people, who were Shemitized by means (chiefly) of Assyrian influence. But it was the Chaldæan learning, in the old Chaldæan or Cushite language. Hence all who studied it, whatever their origin or race, were, on account of their knowledge, termed Chaldæans. In this sense Daniel himself, the "master of the Chaldæans" (Dan. v, 11), would no doubt have been reckoned among them; and so we find Seleucus, a Greek, called a Chaldæan by Strabo (xvi, 1, § 6). It may be doubted whether the Chaldæans at any time were all priests, though no doubt priests were required to be Chaldæans. They were really the learned class, who by their acquaintance with the language of science had become its depositaries. They were priests, magicians, or astronomers, as their preference for one or other of those occupations inclined them; and in the last of the three capacities they probably effected discoveries of great importance.

According to Strabo, who well distinguishes (xvi, 1, § 6) between the learned Chaldæans and the mere race descended from the ancient Kaldi, which continued to predominate in the country bordering upon Arabia and the Gulf, there were two chief seats of Chaldæan learning, Borsippa, and Ur or Orchoë. To these we may add from Pliny (H. N. vi, 26) two others, Babylon, and Sippara or Sepharvaim. The Chaldæans (it would appear) congregated into bodies, forming what we may perhaps call universities, and pursuing the studies in which they engaged together. They probably mixed up to some extent astrology with their astronomy, even in the earlier times, but they certainly made great advances in astronomical science, to which their serene sky, transparent atmosphere, and regular horizon specially invited them. The observations, covering a space of 1903 years, which Callisthenes sent to Aristotle from Babylon (Simplic. ad Arist. de Cal. ii, p. 123), indicate at once the antiquity of such knowledge in the country, and the care with which it had been preserved by the learned class. In later times they seem certainly to have degenerated into mere fortune-tellers (Cicero, de Div. i, 1; Aul. Gell. i, 9; Juv. vi, 552; x, 94, etc.); but this reproach is not justly levelled against the Chaldæans of the empire, and indeed it was but partially deserved so late as the reign of Augustus (see Strabo, xvi, 1, § 6). Josephus, however, uses the word in this sense (War, ii, 7, 38).—Smith, s. v.

Chaldæan Diviner.

Upon the walls of the Assyrian palaces are representations of various magi, all distinguished by a peculiarity of dress. It may be difficult to determine the class to which they respectively belong, but there is one (Botta, pl. xliii) who may be particularized as a diviner, and probably of the Chaldæan race, for his person is much thinner, and his features are more delicate than are those of the other attendants of the court, indicating a different order of occupations, and an exemption from the ruder and more active employments of life.—Fairbairn, s. v. See DIVINER.

Chalice (Lat. cal'x), the cup in which the wine of the Eucharist is administered. At first, when the Christians were poor, the cups were of common materials; but when they grew rich, the cups were of the most costly materials they could afford, such as onyx, sardonyx, silver, and gold. The chalices are of two kinds, the greater, containing a large quantity of wine, and the less, called ministeriales, because the priests deliver the wine to be drunk out of them.—Bingham, Orig. Eccles. bk. viii, ch. vi, § 21; Doughtæus, de Calic. Euchar. Vet. (Helmst. 1726); Siegel, Alterthümer, i, 61.

Challoner, RICHARD, an English Romanist, was born at Lewes, Sussex, Sept. 29, 1691. His parents were Protestants, but he was led over to Rome by his tutor, Mr. Gother, a Romish chaplain at Warworth, Northamptonshire. In 1704 he went to the English college in the University of Douay, where he was appointed professor of poetry, afterwards of rhetoric, in 1713 of philosophy, and in 1718 of divinity. In 1720 he became vice-president of his college, and ten years afterwards was sent on a mission to England. He now commenced a series of controversial works, among which was a reply to Conyers Middleton's Letter from Rome. In 1741 he was made titular bishop of London and Salisbury, and vicar apostolic. He was accused of acting against the anti-papal law of William III, but was acquitted. In 1780 he was again in danger from Lord George Gordon's riots. He died in 1781. See Barnard, Life of Richard Challoner (Lond. 1784, 8vo). Among his writings are, 1. The Catholic Christian instructed in the Sacraments, Sacrifices, and Ceremonies of the Church (against Middleton's Conformity between Popery and Paganism):—2. Britannia Sancta (Memoirs of British Saints, 1745, 2 vols. 4to):—3. A Caveat against Methodism, etc.—Gorton, Biog. Dictionary, s. v.; Allibone, Dictionary of Authors, i, 361.

Chamber (the translation of various Heb. words). Oriental houses have in general a court in the centre, with cloisters and a gallery, into which the chambers open, the apartments of the women being at the back, and only to be approached by passing through the others. Toward the street is a dead wall, with a porch, over which is a chamber, sometimes used as a lodging for guests, and sometimes as a store-room, it being well suited for either of these purposes, by being connected with the rest of the house by a door in the gallery, and having a separate staircase opening into the porch. This is the "chamber on the wall" (עֲלִיַּת־קִיר, wall-loft, Sept. ὑπερῷον) which the Shunamite prepared for the prophet Elisha (2 Kings iv, 10). Such an "upper chamber" (ὑπερῷον) is still the guest-chamber where entertainments are made, which was the custom with the Greeks as well as the Jews (Matt. ix, 14; Mark xiv, 14). Among the former it occupied the upper story; among the Hebrews it seems to have been on, or connected with, the flat roof of their dwellings (comp. Acts xx, 8). These upper chambers were also sometimes used for the performance of idolatrous rites (2 Kings xxiii, 12), and in them the bodies of the dead were laid out (Acts ix, 37). The early Christians, too, held their meetings for worship in such places. Besides these, there were inner chambers, or a "chamber within a chamber" (2 Kings xxii, 25), such as that into which the messenger of Elisha retired to anoint Jehu (2 Kings ix, 2). See HOUSE.

The term chamber is used metaphorically in many places of the Scriptures, as Psa. civ, 3, 13; Prov. vii, 27. To apply ourselves to earnest prayer and supplication, and to depend on the promises and providence of God for special protection, is to enter into our chambers, that we may be safe, as the Hebrews were in their houses, from the destroying angel (Isa. xxvi, 20). See BED-CHAMBER.

The "chambers of the south" (Job ix, 9) are the constellations, or clusters of stars, belonging to the southern part of the firmament. See ASTRONOMY.

The term "Chambers of Imagery" (חַדְרֵי מַשְׂכִּית, figure-apartments; Sept. κοιτῶν κρυπτός) is used by the prophet Ezekiel (viii, 12) to denote the vision which he had of the abominations practiced by the Jews in the distant Jerusalem. As the practices there denounced were evidently borrowed from their Chaldæan oppressors, they derive striking elucidation from the gorgeous halls of the Assyrian palaces lately brought to light by Layard, with their long lines of sculptured animals, and kings worshipping before them (Nineveh, ii, 209). See IMAGERY.

"Chambering" (κοῖται) signifies in Rom. xiv, 13, that lewd association with courtesans and similar characters that was a peculiar feature of the heathenism of that age. See HARLOT.

Chamberlain (סָרִיס, saris', 2 Kings xxiii, 18; Esth. i, 10, 12, 14; ii, 3, 14, 15, 21; iv, 4, 5; vi, 2, 14; Sept. regularly εὐνοῦχος, twice σπάδων, all signifying castrated; in other places it is translated "eunuch," or "officer"). The term appears to have been applied to officers confidentially employed about the person of the sovereign; thus Potiphar, who was also captain of the guard, in the Egyptian court, is styled thus (Gen. xxxvii, 36; xxxix, 1). It probably also occurs in the title Rab*saris* (q. v.). The title "chamberlain" (οἰκονόμος), in Rom. xvi, 23, probably denotes the steward or treasurer of the city, called by the Romans the quæstor. The Vulg. renders it by arcarius, which was the title of a class of inferior magistrates, who had the charge of the public chest (area publica), and were under the authority of the senate. They kept the accounts of the public revenues. (See Reinesius, Syntagm. Inscr. p. 431; La Cerda, Advers. Sacr. cap. 56; Elsner, Obs. Sacr. ii, p. 68; and a note by Reinesius to the Marmora Oxoniensia, p. 515, ed. 1732.) Blastus is said in Acts xii, 20, to have been "the king's (Herod's) chamberlain" (ὁ ἐπὶ τοῦ κοιτῶνος τοῦ βασιλέως), by which is probably meant his personal attendant or valet de chambre. It was a post of honor, which involved great intimacy and influence with the king. The margin of our version gives "that was over the king's bedchamber," the office thus corresponding to that of the præfectus cubiculo (Suetonius, Dom. 16). See EUNUCH.

Chamberlain, Jeremiah, D.D., a Presbyterian minister, was born in York Co., Pa., Jan. 5, 1794, graduated at Dickinson College in 1814, and studied theology at Princeton. He was licensed in 1817, when he became a missionary to the West and South, visiting Natchez, New Orleans, and Mobile. In 1818 he supplied the Bedford church, Pa., and in 1822–23 removed to Danville, Ky., to the Presidency of Centre College. In 1824 he became President in a State institution at Jackson, La., but resigned in 1828, and opened an academy. In 1830 he was made President of Oakland College, Claiborne Co., Miss., the establishment of which was the result of his own enterprise. He was stabbed to the heart (Sept. 5th, 1850) by a student, who afterward committed suicide. He published A Sermon on the Sanctity and Perpetuity of the Sabbath, 1831. Some of his Addresses and Letters were published in the current newspapers.—Sprague, Annals, iv, 590.

Chamberlain, Schuyler, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was born in Woodstock, Conn., Sept. 4th, 1800. In 1818 he joined the first Methodist class formed in Craftsbury, Vt. He was received into the New England Conference in 1828, and during his itinerant career filled a number of important appointments, including the presiding eldership. He died at Craftsbury, May 5, 1862. He possessed superior abilities as a preacher; his style was easy, impressive, and attractive, and there was great clearness and definiteness in his sermons. He was elected three times a delegate to the General Conference. He also represented the town of Craftsbury in the State Legislature three terms.—Minutes of Conferences, 1863, p. 104.

Chameleon, a reptile belonging to the saurian or lizard-like order. In the original of Lev. xi, 30, occur the words ko'ăch (כֹּחַ, so called apparently on account of its great strength) and tinshe'meth (תִּנְשֶׁמֶת), the first of which, in our version, is rendered "chameleon" (after the Sept. and Vulg. χαμαιλέων, chamæleon), and the second "mole;" but Bochart and others consider both words as relating to animals of the saurian or lizard tribe, and that which our translators have termed the mole is, in reality, the chameleon (Chamæleo vulgaris); while the chameleon of our version is some other and larger creature of the same order, perhaps a species of the land crocodile. See MOLE. "The chameleon is a small species of lizard, celebrated for the faculty it has of changing the color of its skin. This property, however, has no reference to the substance it may be placed on, as generally asserted, but is solely derived from the bulk of its respiratory organs acting upon its transparent skin and on the blood of the animal. The chameleons form a small genus of saurians, easily distinguished by the shagreened character of the skin, and the five toes on the feet, divided differently from those of most other animals, there being, if the expression may be allowed, two thumbs opposed to three fingers. Their eyes are telescopic, move separately, and can be directed backward or forward. Chameleons are slow, inoffensive, and capable of considerable abstinence from food, which consists solely of flies, caught by a rapid protrusion of a long and viscous tongue. Among themselves they are irascible, and are then liable to change their colors rapidly; dark yellow or gray is predominant when they are in a quiescent state, but, while the emotions are in activity, it passes into green, purple, and even ashy black. The species found in Palestine and all Northern Africa is the common 'African chameleon,' and probably is that referred to in Lev. xi, 30, where unclean animals are mentioned" (Kitto, s. v.). (See Penny Cyclopædia, s. v.). See LIZARD.

Chamier, DANIEL, a French Protestant divine, was born in 1565; studied at Orange; and at 16 became one of the professors of the college at Nismes. In 1583 he went to study at Geneva, where he was ordained. On his return he was made pastor of Vans, and afterward of Aubenas, and some time after succeeded his father, Adrian Chamier, as pastor of Montélimar. In 1596 he was sent by the province to the National Synod of Saumur, and several times afterwards to the Assemblies of Laudun, Vendôme, Saumur, and Châtellerault. He gained great credit by his firmness in the negotiations relating to the Edict of Nantes. In 1600 he distinguished himself in a controversy with Father Coton at Nismes, and the next year with the Jesuit Gaultier. In 1601 he became a delegate to the National Synod of Gergeau, and, together with Maraval, went as a deputation to the king to ask for the continuation of the Saumur Assembly; this was refused, but the convocation of an assembly at Sainte Foix was granted, and of this he also became a member, as well as of several succeeding assemblies. Made pastor of Montauban, he also applied himself to the restoration of its college, and continued his labors as preacher and professor until he was killed by a cannon-ball at the siege of that city on Oct. 21, 1621. His principal works are: Dispute de la vocation des ministres en l'Eglise Reformée (La Rochelle, 1598, 8vo); Epistolæ Jesuiticæ (Gen. 1599, 8vo); Confusion des disputes papistes (Gen. 1600, 8vo); Disputatio scholastico-theologica de œcumenico pontifice (Gen. 1601, 8vo); La honte de Babylon (pt. i, 1612, 8vo); Panstratiæ catholicæ sive controversiarum de religione adv. pontificios corpus (Gen. 1626, 4 vols. fol.; 2d ed. Frankf. ad M. 1627, 4 vols. fol.); Corpus theologicum, sive Loci communes (Gen. 1618, fol.). Chamois, the rendering in the Auth. Vers. at Deut. xix, 5, of the Heb. זֶמֶר, ze'mer (so called from leaping; Sept. and Vulg. understand the giraffe, καμηλοπάρδαλις, camelopardalus; Luther "elend" or elk). The enumeration there requires us to understand zemer to be a clean ruminant; but it is plain that the Mosaic list of clean animals would not include such as were totally out of the reach of the Hebrew people, and at best only known to them from specimens seen in Egypt, consisting of presents sent from Nubia, or in pictures on the walls of temples. The camelopard is exclusively an inhabitant of Southern Africa (comp. Strabo, xvi, 771; xvii, 827; Pliny, viii, 27), and therefore could not come in the way of the people of Israel (see Michaelis, Suppl. iii, 628). The same objection applies to the elk, because that species of deer never appears further south than Northern Germany and Poland (Cuvier, Anim. Kingd. i, 376 sq.). As to the chamois (Gesenius, Thes. i, 420), though it did exist in the mountains of Greece, and is still found in Central Asia, there is no vestige of its having at any time frequented Libanus or any other part of Syria. Zammer is still used in Persia and India for any large species of ruminants, particularly those of the stag kind. In the sacred text, however, the word zemer is not generical, but strictly specific. Ail, or "stag," is mentioned, as well as several Antilopidæ, in the same verse; we must, therefore, look for an animal not hitherto noticed, and withal sufficiently important to merit being named in such an ordinance. See DEER; GOAT; GAZELLE, etc.

The only species that seems to answer the conditions required is a wild sheep, still not uncommon in the Mokattam rocks near Cairo, found in Sinai, and eastward in the broken ridges of Stony Arabia, where it is known under the name of kebsh, a slight mutation of the old Hebrew כֶּשֶׂב, kesb, or, rather, כֶּבֶשׂ, kebes, which is applied, indeed, to a domestic sheep, one that grazed. This animal is frequently represented and hieroglyphically named on Egyptian monuments (Wilkinson, Anc. Eg. iii, 19). It is a fearless climber, and secure on its feet, among the sharpest and most elevated ridges. In stature the animal exceeds a large domestic sheep, though it is not more bulky of body. Instead of wool, it is covered with American author of his time. He possessed the best elements of immediate success as a writer—a poetic temperament, and a style of remarkable transparency and power. The greatest faults of his style are repetition and expansion, the fine gold being often beaten out into very thin leaf. Channing's works were reviewed by Macaulay in the Edinburgh Review (vol. lxix, p. 214), and a graphic sketch of him is given by Stevens in the Methodist Quarterly Review (Jan. 1849, art. iv), from which the present article is condensed. His Works have been published in Boston in 6 vols. 12mo (reprinted in England). Many of them have been translated into German (Berlin, 1850–55), also into French, with an Essay on his Life and Writings, by Laboulaye.—Memoirs and Correspondence of Channing (Bost. 1848, 3 vols. 12mo); Ware, American Unitarian Biography, ii, 139; Sprague, Unitar. Pulpit, 360 sq.; British Quarterly, Nov. 1848, art. i; Literary and Theological Review, i, 304; N. American Review, xli, 366; Democratic Review (Bancroft), xii, 524; Westminster Review (J. Martineau), l, 317; Edinburgh Review, lxix, 214; Allibone, Dict. of Authors, i, 367.

Channunæ'us (Χαννουναῖος), given (1 Esdr. viii, 48) as a person, several of whose "sons" (there named) were among the priests or Levites secured by Ezra to accompany his party to Jerusalem; corresponding apparently to MERARI of the Heb. text (Ezra viii, 19).

Chant (פָּרַט, parat', to chatter, spoken contemptuously: Sept. ἐπιχαράσσω) occurs only in Amos vi, 5, where the passage, "That chant to the sound of the viol," may be rendered, "That sing to the sound of the harp." The Chaldee, Syriac, and Vulgate read, "who sing to the sound of the psaltery;" and the margin of our version gives "quaver." Josephus informs us that the instrument here termed nebel was of a triangular shape, and carried in the hand. In the paintings on the monuments at Thebes we find players on the harp in the act of singing to the sound of their own music. (See the cut below.) Similar scenes are depicted on the Assyrian monuments. See MUSIC. Both among the Jews and the Egyptians musical instruments were chiefly played upon by women: the Psalmist, describing a musical procession, says, "The singers went before, the players on instruments followed after; among them were the damsels playing with timbrels" (Psa. lxviii, 25). See HARP.

CHANT (cantus, a song), the word employed in the early Church to designate the vocal music of the congregation. The term was applied, later, to special tunes adapted to prose; e. g. the Ambrosian, established by St. Ambrose, and the Gregorian, introduced by Pope Gregory the Great, who established schools of chanters, and corrected the Church music. This, at first, was called the Roman song; afterwards the plain song, as the choir and people sing in unison. In modern liturgical worship, the word designates the musical performance of all those parts of a prose liturgy which are permitted to be sung or recited in a musical tone. In a wider sense, it is used to denote those forms of sacred music in which prose (e. g. passages of Scripture) is sung in simple harmonies. See MUSIC.

Chantry (old French chanterie, from chanter, to sing), an ecclesiastical benefice or endowment to provide for the chanting of masses for the repose of the souls of the founders. Money was often left also for the building of a chapel in which the masses were to be chanted, and hence the term was applied also to such chapels. They were sometimes built in or near a church, but more usually were attached to an abbey or monastery, and were frequently very richly decorated.

Chanuca. See DEDICATION (FEAST OF).

Chaos, a term taken from the Greek mythology, according to which Chaos was the first existence and the origin of all subsequent forms of being (Hesiod, Theogon. 116; Ovid, Metamorph. i, 5). The word itself (in Gr. χάος, immeasurable space) signifies the vast void, or the confused mass of elements from which it was supposed by the ancient philosophers that the world was formed. It has been employed in later times to denote the unformed mass of primeval matter described by the sacred historian in Gen. i, 2, corresponding to the Heb. words תֹּהוּ, to'hu, and בֹּהוּ, bo'hu, a waste void, a desert, a waste solitude, rendered in the Sept. ἀόρατος καὶ ἀκατασκεύαστος, invisible and without order. These two words, combined for the sake of the paronomasia into the phrase תֹּהוּ וָבֹהוּ, in which the repetition of similar terms is a Hebrew method of designating intensity or superlativeness, signify simply utter desolation.

The description which Ovid (l. c.) gives of Chaos itself, and of the formation of the world from the chaotic mass, is very remarkable. The following is a literal version:

> Ere sea, or land, or sky, that covers all,
> Existed, over all of nature's round
> One face there was, which men have Chaos named—
> A rude, unfathomed mass, with naught save weight;
> And here were heaped the jarring elements
> Of ill-connected things. No sun as yet
> His rays afforded to the world; the moon
> Filled not afresh her horns by monthly growth;
> Nor hung the globe in circumambient air,
> Poised by its balanced weight; nor had the sea
> Reached forth its arms along the distant shore.
> Where'er was earth, there also sea and air;
> No land to stand upon, no wave to swim,
> And rayless air. Nothing preserved its form:
> Each thing opposed the rest; since in one frame
> The cold with hot things fought, the moist with dry,
> The soft with hard, and light with heavy things.
> This strife the God and kindly Nature quelled,
> By cleaving sky from land, and land from sea,
> And parting liquid sky from thicker air.
> These thus evolved and from the blind mass drawn,
> Disjoined in space, were tied in friendly peace:
> The fiery force of heaven's weightless arch
> Leaped forth, and chose the topmost point its seat;
> The air comes next in gravity and place;
> The denser earth drags down the bulky parts,
> Crushed with its weight; the water, flowing round,
> The outskirts held, and bound the orb entire.

"This statement bears so many striking resemblances to the Mosaic account of the creation that one can scarcely fail to regard it as having been derived by tradition from the same source. There is, however, this great difference between the scriptural and the heathen cosmogonies — that the former sets out with the emphatic declaration that the unformed mass was the creation of God; while the latter speaks of it as the already existing materials out of which he formed the world, or even as itself the cause and author of all things. Most interpreters, who have been ignorant of geological phenomena, have at once decided that the chaos of which Moses speaks was the form in which

tures. There has been some speculation as to any difference of meaning between the above word and the briefer (masc.) form רֶכֶב, merkab', which occurs in three passages only. In 1 Kings v, 6, the latter obviously means chariots, taken collectively. But in Lev. xv, 9 (Auth. Vers. "saddle"), and Cant. iii, 10 ("the covering"), it has been understood by some to denote the seat of a chariot. To this view there is the fatal objection that ancient chariots had no seats. It appears to denote the seat of a litter (the only vehicle that had a seat), and its name merkab may have been derived from the general resemblance of the body of a litter (distinguished from the canopy, etc.), both in form and use, to that of a chariot. Another still simpler form, the word רֶכֶב, re'keb (with the analogous forms רִכְבָּה, rikbah', Ezek. xxvii, 20, and רִכּוּב, rekhb', Psa. civ, 3), from the same root, appears to signify a carriage of any kind, and is especially used with reference to large bodies of carriages, and hence most generally of war-chariots; for chariots were anciently seldom seen together in large numbers except in war. It is applied to the war-chariots of the Egyptians (Exod. xiv, 9), the Canaanites (Josh. xvii, 18; Judg. i, 19; iv, 3), the Hebrews (2 Kings ix, 21, 24; x, 16), the Syrians (2 Kings v, 9), the Persians (Isa. xxi, 7, 9). To this corresponds the ῥέδη of Rev. xviii, 13; the Latin rheda, a carriage with four wheels, an improvement of later times. By a comparison of these references with those passages in which merkabah occurs, we find the two words applied to all sorts of carriages indifferently and interchangeably, just as we should say either "carriage" or "coach"—neither of which is specific, and both of which differ more from each other than the Hebrew words in question—to denote the same vehicle. Indeed, there are passages in which both words are manifestly applied to the same identical vehicle, as in 2 Kings v, 9, 21, and 1 Kings xxii, 35, 38, where some have endeavored to make out a difference between the Heb. terms. There is another word once rendered chariot, viz. עֲגָלָה (egalah', Psa. xlvi, 9), but it denotes a plaustrum, cart, or wagon drawn by oxen. See CART. The only other words rendered "chariot" in the Bible are אַפִּרְיוֹן (appiryon', Cant. iii, 9), which the etymol., as well as the rendering in the Sept. and Vulg., shows to have been a portable sedan or palanquin [see LITTER], and הוֹצֵן, (ho'tsen, only in Ezek. xxiii, 24), which, according to etymology and the Rabbins, means weapons or defensive armor. It is demonstrated that the word rekeb, rendered "horsemen," does not mean "cavalry," but merely riders in the chariots—in other words, chariot-warriors; for Exod. xiv, 7, which gives the first account of the Egyptian army, says, "he took six hundred chosen chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt, and captains over every one of them" (or in each). The "horsemen" in verse 9 and the subsequent verses means literally "riders," not upon the horses, but in the chariots. Hence, though Moses's song of triumph mentions the "horse and his rider" (Exod. xv, 1), yet ver. 4 clearly indicates that by rider chariot-rider is understood: "Pharaoh's chariots and his host hath he cast into the sea; his chosen captains also (chariot-warriors) are drowned in the Red Sea." See HORSE.

The earliest mention of chariots in Scripture is in Egypt, where Joseph, as a mark of distinction, was placed in Pharaoh's second chariot (Gen. xli, 43), and later when he went in his own chariot to meet his father on his entrance into Egypt from Canaan (xlvi, 29). In the funeral procession of Jacob chariots also formed a part, possibly by way of escort or as a guard of honor (l, 9). The next mention of Egyptian chariots is for a warlike purpose (Exod. xiv, 7). In this point of view chariots among some nations of antiquity, as elephants among others, may be regarded as filling the place of heavy artillery in modern times, so that the military power of a nation might be estimated by the number of its chariots. Thus Pharaoh, in pursuing Israel, took with him 600 chariots. The Canaanites of the valleys of Palestine were enabled to resist the Israelites successfully in consequence of the number of their chariots of iron, i. e. perhaps armed with iron scythes (Josh. xvii, 18; Judg. i, 19; see Schickendanz, De curribus falcatis, Zerbst. 1754). Jabin, king of Canaan, had 900 chariots (Judg. iv, 3). The Philistines in Saul's time had 30,000, a number which seems excessive (1 Sam. xiii, 5; but comp. the Sept. and Joseph. Ant. vi, 6, 1). David took from Hadadezer, king of Zobah, 1000 chariots (2 Sam. viii, 4), and from the Syrians a little later 700 (x, 18), who, in order to recover their ground, collected 32,000 chariots (1 Chron. xix, 7). Up to this time the Israelites possessed few or no chariots, partly, no doubt, in consequence of the theocratic prohibition against multiplying horses, for fear of intercourse with Egypt, and the regal despotism implied in the possession of them (Deut. xvii, 16; 1 Sam. viii, 11, 12). But to some extent David (2 Sam. viii, 4), and in a much greater degree Solomon, broke through the prohibition from seeing the necessity of placing his kingdom, under its altered circumstances, on a footing of military equality or superiority toward other nations. He raised, therefore, and maintained a force of 1400 chariots (1 Kings x, 25) by taxation on certain cities, agreeably to Eastern custom in such matters (1 Kings ix, 19; x, 25; Xenoph. Anab. i, 4, 9). The chariots themselves, and also the horses, were imported chiefly from Egypt, and the cost of each chariot was 600 shekels of silver, and of each horse 150 (1 Kings x, 29). See SHEKEL. From this time chariots were regarded as among the most important arms of war, though the supplies of them and of horses appear to have been still drawn from Egypt (1 Kings xxii, 34; 2 Kings ix, 16, 21; xiii, 7, 14; xviii, 24; xxiii, 30; Isa. xxxi, 1). The prophets also allude frequently to chariots as typical of power (Psa. xx, 7; civ, 3; Jer. li, 21; Zech. vi, 1). Chariots of other nations are likewise mentioned, as of Assyria (2 Kings xix, 23; Ezek. xxiii, 24), Syria (2 Sam. viii, and 2 Kings vi, 14, 15), Persia (Isa. xxii, 6); and, lastly, Antiochus Eupator is said to have had 300 chariots armed with scythes (2 Macc. xiii, 2). In the N. T. the only mention made of a chariot, except in Rev. ix, 9, is in the case of the Ethiopian or Abyssinian eunuch of Queen Candace, who is described as sitting in his chariot reading (Acts viii, 28, 29, 38). See RIDER.

Jewish chariots were no doubt imitated from Egyptian models, if not actually imported from Egypt. These appear to have come into use not earlier than the 18th dynasty (B.C. 1530). The war-chariot, from which the chariot used in peace did not essentially differ, was extremely simple in its construction. It consisted, as appears both from Egyptian paintings and reliefs, as well as from an actual specimen preserved at Florence, of a nearly semicircular wooden frame with straightened sides, resting posteriorly on the axle-tree of a pair of wheels, and supporting a rail of wood or ivory attached to the frame by leathern thongs and one wooden upright in front. The floor of the car was made of rope net-work, intended to give a more springy footing to the occupants. The car was mounted from the back, which was open, and the sides were strengthened and ornamented with leather and metal binding.

Attached to the off or right-hand side, and crossing each other diagonally, were the bow-case, and inclining backwards, the quiver and spear-case. If two persons were in the chariot a second bow-case was added. The wheels, of which there were 2, had 6 spokes: those of peace chariots had sometimes 4, fastened to the axle by a linch-pin secured by a thong. There were no traces; but the horses, which were often of different colors, wore only a breast-band and girths, which were attached to the saddle, together with head furniture, consisting of cheek-pieces, throat-lash, head-stall, and straps across the forehead and nose. A bearing-rein was fastened to a ring or hook in front of the saddle, and the driving-reins passed through other rings on each side of both horses. From the central point of the saddle rose a short stem of metal, ending in a knob, whether for use or mere ornament is not certain. The driver stood on the off side, and in discharging his arrow hung his whip from the wrist. In some instances the king is represented alone in his chariot, with the reins fastened round his body, thus using his weapons with his hands at liberty. Most commonly two persons, and sometimes three, rode in the chariot, of whom the third was employed to carry the state umbrella (2 Kings ix, 20, 24; 1 Kings xxii, 34; Acts viii, 38). A second chariot usually accompanied the king to battle, to be used in case of necessity (2 Chron. xxv, 34).

On peaceable occasions the Egyptian gentleman sometimes drove alone in his chariot, attended by servants on foot. The horses wore housings to protect them from heat and insects. For royal personages and women of rank, an umbrella was carried by a bearer or fixed upright in the chariot. Sometimes mules were driven instead of horses, and in travelling sometimes oxen; but for travelling purposes the sides of the chariot appear to have been closed. One instance occurs of a 4-wheeled car, which (like the τετράκυκλος ἅμαξα of Herod. ii, 63) was used for religious purposes. See CART. The processes of manufacture of chariots and harness are fully illustrated by existing sculptures, in which also are represented the chariots used by neighboring nations (Wilkinson, Anc. Egypt. i, 368, 386; ii, 75, 76, 2d ed.).

The earliest Egyptian chariot noticed in Scripture (Gen. xli, 43) was doubtless a state-chariot; but, among the Egyptians, it does not appear to have been different from the war-chariot, the splendid military appointments of which rendered it fit for purposes of royal pomp. Hence, although the same word (רֶכֶב, merkabah) is again used for chariots of state in Gen. xlvi, 29; 1 Sam. viii, 11; 2 Sam. xv, 1, it undoubtedly denotes a war-chariot in Exod. xv, 4; Joel ii, 5. In Isa. ii, 7, the same word appears to comprehend chariots of every kind which were found in cities. In fact, chariots anciently in the East were used almost entirely for purposes of state or of war, being very rarely employed by private persons. We also observe that where private carriages were known, as in Egypt, they were of the same shape as those used in war, only having less complete military accoutrements, although retaining the case for arrows. One of the most interesting of the Egyptian paintings represents a person of quality arriving late at an entertainment in his curricle, drawn (like all the Egyptian chariots) by two horses (one hidden by the other in profile). He is attended by a number of running footmen, one of whom hastens forward to knock at the door of the house, another advances to take the reins, a third bears a stool to assist his master in alighting, and most of them carry their sandals in their hands, that they may run with the more ease. This conveys a lively illustration of such passages as 1 Sam. viii, 11; 2 Sam. xv, 1. The principal distinction between these private chariots and those actually used in war was, as appears from the monuments, that in the former the party drove himself, whereas in war the chariot, as among the Greeks, often contained a second person to drive it, that the warrior might be at liberty to employ his weapons with the more effect. But this was not always the case; for in the Egyptian monuments we often see even royal personages alone in their chariots, warring furiously, with the reins lashed round their waist. So it appears that Jehu (who certainly rode in a war-chariot) drove himself, for his peculiar style of driving was recognised at a considerable distance (2 Kings ix, 20). The Egyptians used horses in the equipment of an armed force before Jacob and his sons had settled in Goshen; they had chariots of war, and mounted asses and mules, and therefore could not be ignorant of the art of riding; but for ages after that period Arab nations rode on the bare back, and guided the animals with a wand. Others, and probably the shepherd invaders, noosed a single rope in a slip-knot round the lower jaw, forming an imperfect bridle with only one rein; a practice still in vogue among the Bedouins. Thus cavalry were but little formidable, compared with chariots, until a complete command over the horse was obtained by the discovery of a true bridle. This seems to have been first introduced by chariot-drivers, and there are figures of well-constructed harness, reins, and mouth-pieces in very early Egyptian monuments, representing both native and foreign chariots of war. In fighting from chariots great dexterity was shown by the warrior, not only in handling his weapons, but also in stepping out upon the pole to the horses' shoulders, in order the better to attain his enemies; and the charioteer was an important person, sometimes equal in rank to the warrior himself. Both the kingdoms of Judah and Israel had war-chariots, and, from the case of king Josiah at the battle of Megiddo, it is clear they had also travelling vehicles, for, being wounded, he quitted his fighting-chariot, and in a second, evidently more commodious, he was brought to Jerusalem (2 Chron. xxxv, 24). Chariots of war continued to be used in Syria in the time of the Maccabees (2 Macc. xiii, 5), and in Britain when Cæsar invaded the island (Bell. Gall. iv, 29).

In the prophecy of Nahum, who was of the first captivity, and resident (if not born) at Elkosh in Assyria, there is much allusion to chariots, suggested doubtless by their frequency before his eyes in the streets of Nineveh and throughout the Assyrian empire. In fact, when prophesying the downfall of Nineveh, he gives a particular and animated description (ii, 34) of their action in the streets of the great city:

> The shield of his heroes is reddened,
> The men of prowess are crimsoned [in dress]:
> With the fire of irons [flashing steel armatures] is the chariot in the day of his array,
> And the cypresses [lances] are brandished;
> In the streets will madden the chariot-force,
> They will race in the broad places;
> Their appearance is as the torches,
> As the lightnings will they rush.

Abundant illustrations of this passage occur on the recently discovered sculptures of Nineveh and Babylon. They are minutely described by Layard (Nineveh, ii, 268 sq.). The earlier Assyrian war-chariot and harness did not differ essentially from the Egyptian. Two or three persons stood in the car, but the driver is sometimes represented as standing on the near side, while a third warrior in the chariot held a shield to protect the archer in discharging his arrow. The car appears to have had closed sides. The war-chariot wheels had 6 spokes; the state or peace chariot 8 or more; and a third person in state processions carried the royal umbrella. A third horse, like the Greek παρήορος, was generally attached (Layard, Nineveh, ii, 350). In later times the third horse was laid aside, the wheels were made higher, and had 8 spokes, and the front of the car, to which the quiver was removed from its former side position, was made square instead of round. The cars were more highly ornamented, panelled, and inlaid with valuable woods and metals, and painted. The embroidered housings, in which in earlier times the horses were clothed, were laid aside, and plumes and tassels used to decorate their necks and foreheads (Layard, Nineveh, ii, 353, 356; Nineveh and Babylon, p. 341, 587, 603, 618; Mon. of Nin. 2d series, pl. 24; comp. Ezek. xxvii, 20). Chariots used for other purposes than that of war, especially in hunting, were also found sculptured on the Assyrian monuments, as well as occasionally carts for the transportation of persons or baggage.

The Persian art, as appears from the sculptures at Persepolis, and also at Koyounjik, shows great similarity to the Assyrian; but the procession represented at the former place contains a chariot or car with wheels of 12 spokes, while, from the sculptures at the latter, it appears that the Elamites, or Persians, besides chariots containing two persons, which were sometimes drawn by four horses, used a kind of cart, drawn by a single mule or more, consisting of a stage on high wheels, capable of holding five or six persons, of whom the driver sat on a low stool, with his legs hanging on each side of the pole (Isa. xxii, 6; Ezek. xxiii, 24; see Xenoph. Cyrop. iv, 3, 1; ii, 22; Niebuhr, Voyage, ii, 105; Chardin, Voyage, vii, 257, pl. lix; Layard, Nin. & Bab. p. 447, 449; Olearius, Travels, p. 302). Chariots armed with scythes (ἅρματα δρεπανηφορα, Xen. Anab. i, 7, 10) may perhaps be intended by the "chariots of iron" of the Canaanites; they are mentioned as part of the equipment of Antiochus (2 Macc. xiii, 2), and of Darius (Diod. Sic. xvii, 53; Appian, Syr. 32). Xenophon mentions a Persian chariot with 4 poles and 8 horses (Cyrop. vi, 4). The Persian custom of sacrificing horses to the Sun (Xen. Cyrop. viii, 3, 12), seems to have led to offerings of chariots and horses for the same object among the Jewish monarchs who fell into idolatry (Ezek. viii, 17; 2 Kings xxii, 11; see P. della Valle, p. 255). See WAGON.

Not very different from the Persian chariot is one represented on a coin found at Babylon, but somewhat ruder; but the spokes of the wheels are eight, as in the Assyrian chariot. This coin has given occasion to much unsound speculation in the attempt to connect it with the history of Daniel. See BABYLON.

Ancient Greek Chariot.

Among the Greeks and Romans, chariots were used at all times for purposes of war, and the chariot-races of the "Isthmian Games" were especially famous (see Smith's Dict. of Class. Antiquity, s. v. Currus). See CHARIOT-RACE.

Ancient Roman Chariot.

Among the parts of wheel-carriages mentioned in the Scriptures are: 1, the wheel, אוֹפָן (ophan', Exod. xiv, 25, etc.); also גַּלְגַּל (gilgal', Isa. xxviii, 28) or גַּלְגֵּל (galgal', Isa. v, 28; Ezek. x, 2, 6; xxiii, 24; xxvi, 10; id. Chald. Dan. vii, 9); 2, the rim, גַּב (gab, 1 Kings vii, 33; Ezek. i, 18); 3, the spokes, חִשֻּׁקִּים (chishshukim', 1 Kings vi, 33); 4, the hub, חִשֻּׁרִים (chishshurim', 1 Kings vii, 33); 5, the axle, יָד (yad, 1 Kings vii, 32, 33). To harness (yoke) the horses or other animals is designated by אָסַר (asar', Gen. xli, 29; 1 Sam. vi, 7; 1 Kings xviii, 14), or רָתַם (ratham', Mic. i, 13); also רָכַב (rakab', Hos. x, 11), which properly signifies to ride or drive. See WHEEL.

The word chariots is sometimes used figuratively for hosts or armies (Psa. lxviii, 17; 2 Kings vi, 17); and Elijah, by his prayers and counsels, and power with God, was "the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof" (2 Kings ii, 12; see Rosh, De curru Israelis, Bautz. 1780), inasmuch as he did more for them than all the chariots they could muster (Psa. xx, 7; Isa. iii, 1).—Kitto, s. v.; Smith, s. v. See WAR.

The term "chariot" is likewise used poetically in Scripture to designate the rapid agencies of God in nature (Psa. civ, 3; lxviii, 17; Isa. lxvi, 15; Hab. iii, 8). See Wemyss, Symbol. Dict. s. v.

CAPTAINS OF CHARIOTS (Exod. xv, 4) might be supposed to denote the officer or officers who had charge of the chariot forces, but the literal meaning is mounted third men (שָׁלִשִׁים). This passage seems obscure, but a picture from an Egyptian tomb (the Rameseium of Thebes), nearly or quite as ancient as the period to which the above-cited passage relates, furnishes a key to this otherwise difficult expression. It represents three men standing upon a chariot, two of whom are prepared for action, and the third manages the horses (compare the large cut above of the Assyrian chariot). They were probably selected for their valor, and perhaps formed by themselves a distinct division of the army, and each had its distinct officer (Exod. xiv, 7). See CAPTAINS.

CHARIOT OF THE CHERUBIM probably means the frame-work on which the cherubim rested, and one pattern of which might resemble the body of a chariot (1 Chron. xxviii, 18). See CHERUB.

CHARIOT-CITIES, cities specially designated for storing the chariots of war during the time of peace, as magazines and arsenals of modern times are used (2 Chron. i, 14). See CITY.

CHARIOT-HORSES, such as were peculiarly fitted, by size, spirit, docility, or special training, for service in chariots, as carriage, draught, and saddle horses of later days (2 Kings vii, 14). See HORSE.

CHARIOT-MAN, the driver or charioteer, or perhaps an officer who had charge of the chariot (2 Chron. xviii, 33). See DRIVER.

CHARIOTS OF WAR (Exod. xiv, 7; 2 Sam. viii, 4). One class of carriages thus denominated were used as the common vehicles of princes and generals; but another formed the most terrible of military engines, and were employed in great numbers to break the enemy's battalions by rushing in among them (1 Sam. xiii, 5; 1 Chron. xviii, 4). Like other ancient carriages, they had usually only two wheels; and iron hooks or scythes, strong and sharp, were affixed to the extremities of the axles on each side, which made dreadful havoc among the troops (Josh. xi, 4 Judg. iv, 3, 13). But the Christian ἀγάπη is the streaming forth of positive love, God himself dwelling in the believer, so that streams of living water flow out of him (John iv, 14).' And he commends it, in the most glowing and attractive description ever uttered by tongue of man or angel, in language which comes to the heart with perpetual freshness, like music from the bowers of eternity, and is of itself enough to put beyond all doubt the divinity of Christianity and its infinite superiority to all other religions. 'And now (in the present earthly life of Christians) abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity'" (Schaff, Apostolical Church, § 120). See also Watson, *Theol. Charity, Brothers of (called, in Italy, Fate ben fratelli; in France, Frères de la Charité; in Spain, Brothers of Hospitality), a Romanist order, founded in 1540 at Seville, by the Portuguese Johannes a Deo, for nursing the sick and reforming immoral females. In 1572 Pope Pius V confirmed it, under the rule of St. Augustine, and it then limited itself to serving hospitals for the sick of all nations and religions. In 1580 it had a number of institutions in France, Italy, Germany, Poland, both Indies, and other countries. In 1617 it was received into the number of regular orders by adopting the solemn vows. In 1619 the brethren were exempted from the jurisdiction of the diocesan bishops, and in 1624 they received all the privileges of the mendicant orders. Among the hospitals of the order, those of Milan, Paris, Rome, Naples, Vienna, Prague, are especially celebrated. The number of houses amounts at present to over a hundred, in Italy, France, Spain, Austria, Prussia, Bavaria, and North and South America. Charity, Sisters of, called also DAUGHTERS OF CHRISTIAN CHARITY (Sœurs or Filles de la Charité), or, from their dress, GRAY SISTERS (Sœurs grises), a community of women in the Roman Catholic Church for nursing the poor and the sick, founded in 1629 at Chatillon, in France, by Vincent de Paul, aided by Madame Louise de Marillac le Gras. The rule which Vincent gave to his community was confirmed by the pope in 1658, whereupon the community spread so rapidly that by 1635 two hundred and twenty-four houses were established. Until the end of the eighteenth century they remained almost entirely confined to France, where their labors were interrupted by the Revolution. After a few years they were permitted to take them up again, and in 1807 they were placed under the protection of the mother of Napoleon. Since that time they have enjoyed the patronage of all French governments. In 1827 they nursed in France 145,000 sick persons and 120,000 children, which number has since considerably increased. Since 1815 they have rapidly established themselves in all states in which monastic orders are not forbidden. Several states, as Prussia and Baden, which exclude most of the monastic orders, have made an exception in favor of the Sisters of Charity. Since 1848 they have been admitted into all the German states except Saxony. In all Germany they had, in 1858, establishments in 194 places, with about 2000 members. Spain promised to admit them in the Concordat of 1851. They established themselves in Portugal in 1857, but were there, as also in Brazil, severely attacked by the Liberal party, and mobbed by the populace. Large numbers of them were called to Russia by the government of Alexander II, and they have penetrated even into Denmark and Sweden. In Turkey they conduct several largely-attended schools. They are also found in many of the missions of Asia, Africa, and Australia, and in several of the states of Central and South America. In the United States they were established in 1809 by Elizabeth Seton (a pervert from Protestantism), with a distinct rule, which is still followed in the dioceses of New York, Brooklyn, Newark, and Halifax. The houses in the other dioceses have abandoned Mrs. Seton's rule, and have united with the French order. In 1852 there were 38 houses under the charge of the sisters in different parts of the United States, and the number of sisters was 420. This number has since considerably increased. In the diocese of New York alone there are now about 250 sisters, having under their care, besides the parish schools in the city of New York, a hospital, a male and female asylum, and an industrial school. Their mother-house is at Fonthill, on the Hudson River, near Yonkers.

Sister of Charity.

Numerous other communities of women have been established on the same plan, and on nearly the same rule. The most important among them is the congregation of St. Carolus Borromæus, so called because they chose Borromeo as their patron. Their mother-house is at Nancy, France; and in 1845 they counted 70 houses, with about 700 members. Another was founded in 1808 in Westphalia, by baron Droste zu Vischering, who became afterwards archbishop of Cologne. It counted, in 1858, 41 establishments, with about 200 sisters. The United States have also a number of similar institutions, as Sisters of Charity of Montreal, Sisters of Charity of Nazareth, Sisters of our Lady of Mercy, Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of Charity of the Blessed Virgin, Sisters of Charity of St. Augustine, most of which have been founded during the present century.

No monastic institution has spread since the beginning of the present century with equal rapidity, and the increase is still going on in nearly every part of the world. In 1862, the number of establishments, as far as known, was 1064; namely, 947 in Europe, 80 in America, 17 in Asia, 17 in Africa, and 3 in Australia and Oceanica (P. Karl vom heil. Aloys, Statis. Jahrbuch der Kirche, Ratisbon, 1862). The number of members of the French order was estimated at 13,000, and that of all the Sisters of Charity at 28,000.

"Conscious that celibacy alone excites little admiration in modern times, Rome has sought, by her 'Sisters of Charity' and by her educational orders, to give her female aristocracy better claims on the gratitude of mankind. In England and America the female orders have attracted many to the Church of Rome, and softened many antipathies. The association of unmarried females for such purposes will ever have an attraction for romantic minds; yet the well-worked Protestant congregations in our cities send out more such sisters of charity and educators of the young than any of the sisterhoods of Rome. Without any bond but the law of love, and 'without observation,' because without the dress and separation of Rome's 'Sisters of Charity,' thousands now do the part of Priscilla or Dorcas, yet take part in all home duties and enjoyments, unconscious that they are better than others, or that they have attained a higher perfection than their fathers and mothers" (Lewis, Bible, Missal, and Breviary, i, 124). Charlemagne (CHARLES I, or the Great), Emperor of the West, was born at Salzburg, in Bavaria, about 742, and, jointly with his brother Karloman, succeeded his father, Pepin-le-Bref, in 768. Karloman died in 771, and Charles became sole sovereign. By his wars against the Saxons, the Lombards, and the Saracens of Spain, he increased his empire until he was master of the best part of Europe. Pepin had granted the exarchate of Ravenna to the pope and his successors forever. After Pepin's death, Diedrich, the Lombard king, attacked the pope (Adrian I), who applied to Charlemagne for aid. He crossed the Alps (A.D. 774) with a formidable army, and terminated the contest between the bishops of Rome and the kings of Lombardy forever. The exarchate of Ravenna was overthrown, its vanquished prince was sent into France, and Charlemagne proclaimed himself king of the Lombards. The conqueror visited Rome, where it is said he not only confirmed the grants which Pepin had made to its bishops, but added to them new donations. By these acts he opened a way to the attainment of an object which Pepin had contemplated, but was unable to accomplish—he was enabled to gain the authority as well as to assume the title of Emperor of the West. In A.D. 800 he visited Rome, where Pope Leo III crowned him Emperor of the West, with the title of Carolus I, Cæsar Augustus. "Although this added nothing directly to his power, yet it greatly confirmed and increased the respect entertained for him, such was still the lustre of a title with which were associated recollections of all the greatness of the Roman empire. Nicephorus I, emperor of Constantinople, also acknowledged him, and between them they fixed the limits of the Eastern and Western empires. A profound statesman and legislator, as well as a successful conqueror, he then devoted the remainder of his life to the internal improvement of his vast empire, and to the fortification of its frontiers against the invasions of the Normans and Danes. In 813 he named his third son, Louis (Louis le Débonnaire), his colleague in the empire, and died at Aix-la-Chapelle January 28, 814. "His last days, after the coronation of his son Louis, were occupied in correcting the text of the four Evangelists, in which he was assisted by Greeks and Syrians. Charlemagne had long shown a great zeal for religion; he never failed, while his health permitted, to attend divine service daily, morning and evening. He took great care that the service should be conducted with decorum and propriety, supplied his chapels with abundance of vestments and ornaments, and, being perfectly instructed in the best manner of reading and singing, he corrected the mode of performing both; but he himself never read publicly in church, but contented himself with singing in a low tone and with others. His alms were not only liberally bestowed in his own dominions, but on all the poor and distressed Christians in Syria, Egypt, Africa, Jerusalem, Alexandria, and Carthage; and he cultivated the friendship of unbelieving princes with a view to assuage the sufferings of the Christians under their dominion" (Palmer, Church History, ch. xv).

Charlemagne was throughout his reign the champion of Christianity. He never rested until the Saxons were not only subjected, but baptized, if not Christianized; his war against the Lombards, whose kingdom he finally annexed, was originally commenced at the instance of the pope, whose power was menaced by the inroads of these barbarians. It cannot be denied, however, that Charlemagne propagated Christianity by the use of "carnal weapons." His "wholesale and indiscriminate mode of administering baptism on the conclusion of his campaigns drew forth the indignant expostulations of Alcuin and men of a kindred spirit" (Mac Lear, Missions in the Mid. Ages, p. 449). "He did not confine his benefactions to the bishop of Rome, but distributed them among all the orders of the hierarchy. He augmented their wealth, he enlarged their privileges, he exalted their dignity, he confirmed and extended their immunities. But the motives of his liberality were such as became a magnanimous and a benevolent monarch. Superstition has never been accounted among them, nor any unfounded fears or undue reverence of the ecclesiastical order; from the former he was perhaps more nearly exempt than would have appeared possible in so rude an age; and in his transactions with the clergy, even with the pope himself, he never forgot, or allowed them to forget, his own supremacy. But he was desirous to civilize his barbarous subjects; he was anxious to influence their rude manners, and correct their vicious morals, by the more general diffusion and comprehension of the Christian truths; and he was willing also to sow the seeds of secular learning, and dispel the ignorance which oppressed his people" (Waddington, Church History, ch. v.). As a statesman he favored the Church because he considered it a school for the improvement of his people, and, while adding to the temporal power of the Church, was careful not to render it independent. He decided against image-worship, and in his Libri Carolini (A.D. 790, Elias Philyra, 1549; Heumann, Han. 1731), he set forth (in opposition to the decision of the second Synod of Nicæa of A.D. 787), that "God could be worshipped only in spirit," and his opinions were indorsed by the Synods of Frankfort (794) and of Paris (825), censuring Adrian's treatise in favor of image-worship. But, while Charlemagne condemned image-worship as idolatry, the Caroline books approve of the crucifix, and of reverence to the relics of saints, etc.—Hase, Ch. History (N. Y. ed.), p. 178; Chambers, Encyclopædia, s. v.; Herzog, Real-Encyklopädie, vii, 379 sq.; Gibbon, Decline and Fall, ch. xlix; Neander, Church History, iii, 235 sq.; *Studien u. Charles V, emperor of Germany and king of Spain (under the title of Don Carlos I), eldest son of Philip, archduke of Austria, and Joanna, second daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain, was born at Ghent, Feb. 24th, 1500, and died at the monastery of San Yuste, near Placencia, in Estramadura, Spain, Sept. 21st, 1558. His father died when he was only six years of age, and his grandfather Maximilian became his guardian, and placed him under the care of William de Croy, lord of Chièvres, as governor, and Adrian of Utrecht, afterwards Pope Adrian VI, as preceptor.

On the death of his grandfather Ferdinand, Charles, conjointly with his mother, was acknowledged as his successor, and visited Spain in 1517, where the conduct of his Flemish ministers gave rise to serious troubles. In the year 1519 his grandfather Maximilian died, and Charles became a competitor for the imperial crown. Through the efforts of Frederick the Wise, elector of Saxony and regent of the empire, he was chosen over Francis I of France, his principal rival, June 28th, 1519. This contest ripened the jealousy between these young and ambitious sovereigns into an enmity which gave rise to four wars, and ended only with the death of Francis.

Charter-house (a corruption of Chartreuse, i. e. Carthusian house) is a hospital, chapel, and school-house in London, established in 1611 by Sir Thomas Sutton. It had originally been a Carthusian monastery, but after the dissolution of monastic establishments by Henry VIII it fell into various hands, and was finally purchased from Lord Suffolk by Sir Thomas Sutton for £13,000, who endowed it with the revenues of upward of 20 manors, lordships, and other estates in various parts of England. This "masterpiece of Protestant English charity," as old Fuller calls it, serves three uses—it is an asylum for poor brethren, an educational, and a religious institution; hence Bacon terms it a "triple good." The Charter-house school is memorable as the place where Barrow, Addison, and John Wesley received their early education.—Chambers, Encyclopædia, s. v.

Chase (צוּד, רָדַף, θώκω, etc.). The practice of hunting wild animals early prevailed among the nomade Hebrews (Gen. xxv, 28; xxvii, 3 sq.), and continued to later times to be a common employment (Lev. xvii, 13; Prov. xii, 27; Josephus, War, i, 21, 13), both for the sake of the flesh of the game (Sirach xxxvi, 21; but in the Sabbatical year it was allowed to multiply, Exod. xxiii, 11; Lev. xxv, 7; comp. Michaelis, Mos. Recht, iii, 178 sq.), and also for the extermination of noxious beasts (2 Sam. xxiii, 20), of both which there was no lack in Palestine (see Harmar, i, 328 sq.). The means employed in this pursuit were usually the bow (Gen. xxvii, 3), the spear or javelin (comp. Strabo, xv, 734), the net (מִכְמֹר, רֶשֶׁת, מָצוֹד; which was likewise used for the larger kinds of animals, as gazelles, Isa. li, 21, and even for lions, Ezek. xix, 8), the sling (צְפִים, פֶּחָ, טוֹקֵשׁ, Eccles. ix, 12; Psa. xci, 3), and the pitfall (פַּחַת, שַׁחַת, Plin. x, 54; comp. Ezek. xix, 4; 2 Sam. xxiii, 20), the last especially for the which, composed the symbolical figures. Each cherub had four distinct faces on one neck—that of a man in front, that of a lion on the right side, and of an ox on the left, while behind was the face of an eagle. Each had four wings, the two under ones covering the lower extremities, or rather the centre of the person (Heb. the feet), in token of decency and humility, while the upper ones, spread out on a level with the head and shoulders, were so joined together, to the edge of his neighbors', as to form a canopy; and in this manner they soared rather than flew, without any vibratory motion with their wings, through the air. Each had straight feet (Heb. "their feet [were] a straight foot," Ezek. i, 7), and the probability is that the legs were destitute of any flexible joint at the knee, and so joined together that its locomotions must have been performed in some other way than by the ordinary process of walking, or lifting one foot after another. Bähr (whose entire remarks on this subject are valuable and often profound) inclines to think that the precise form varied within certain limits; e. g. the cherubic figure might have one, two, or four faces, two or four feet, one or two pair of wings, and might have the bôvine or leonine type as its basis; the imagery being modified to suit the prominently intended attribute, and the highest forms of creature-being expressing best the highest attributes of the Creator (Symbolik, i, 313 sq.). Thus, he thinks, the human form might indicate spirituality (p. 340). (Comp. Grotius on Exod. xxv, 18, and Heb. ix, 5.) Some useful hints as to the connection of cherubic with other mythological forms may be found in Creuzer (Symbol. i, 441, 540).

It has been sometimes disputed whether the colossal cherubim of olive wood, overlaid with gold, with outspread wings, touching in the centre of the oracle and reaching to either wall, placed by Solomon in the Holy of Holies, were substitutes for or additions to the original golden pair. The latter is probably the truth, for had the Mosaic cherubim been lost we should have been informed of the fact. All that we learn about these figures is that they each had a body ten cubits high (1 Kings v, 23), and stood on their feet (2 Chron. iii, 13), so that the monstrous conception of winged child-faces is an error which should long ago have been banished from Christian iconography (De Saulcy, Hist. de l'Art Judaique, p. 25). The expression "cherubims of image work," in 2 Chron, iii, 10 (מַעֲשֵׂה צַבָּתִים, Sept. ἔργον ἐκ ξύλων, Vulg. opere statuario, Marg., of movable work), is very obscure, but would probably give us no farther insight into the subject (Dorjen, De opere Zaazyim in Ugolini Thes. viii, No. 6); but in 1 Chron. xxviii, 18, 19, we learn that David had given to Solomon a model for these figures, which are there called "the chariot of the cherubim" (Vulg. quadriga cherubim). We are not to suppose from this that any wheels supported the figures, but we must take "cherubim" in apposition to "chariots" (Bertheau, ad loc.). The same phrase is found in Eccles. xlix, 8, and is in both cases an allusion to the poetical expression, "He rode upon a cherub, and did fly" (2 Sam. xxii, 11; Psa. xviii, 10), an image magnificently expanded in the subsequent vision of Ezekiel, which for that reason has received from the Rabbis the title of מרכבה, "the chariot." Although the mere word "cherub" is used in these passages, yet the simple human figure is so totally unadapted to perform the function of a chariot, that we are almost driven to the conclusion arrived at by De Saulcy on this ground alone, that the normal type of the cherub involved the body of an ox, as well of Nature which transcend that of man. Among the Greeks the dragon (Photius, Cod. 190, p. 250), and among the Indians the griffin (Pliny, vii, 2), were especially such creatures of mythological imagination. See DRAGON. In the various legends of Hercules the bull and the lion constantly appear as forms of hostile and evil power; and some of the Persian sculptures apparently represent evil genii under similar quasi-cherubic forms. The Hebrew idea seems to limit the number of the cherubim. A pair (Exod. xxv, 18, etc.) were placed on the mercy-seat of the ark; a pair of colossal size overshadowed it in Solomon's Temple with the canopy of their contiguously extended wings. Ezekiel, i, 4–14, speaks of four, and similarly the apocalyptic living creatures, ζῶα (Rev. iv, 6), are four. So at the front or east of Eden were posted "the cherubim," as though the whole of some recognized number. They utter no voice, though one is "heard from above them," nor have dealings with men save to awe and repel. A "man clothed in linen" is introduced as a medium of communication between them and the prophet, whereas for a similar office one of the seraphim personally officiates; and these latter also "cry one to another." The cherubim are placed beneath the actual presence of Jehovah, whose moving throne they appear to draw (Gen. iii, 24; Ezek. i, 5, 25, 26; x, 1, 2, 6, 7; Isa. vi, 2, 3, 6). The expression, however, "the chariot (מֶרְכָּבָה) of the cherubim" (1 Chron. xxviii, 18) does not imply wheels, but the whole apparatus of ark and cherubim is probably so called in reference to its being carried on staves, and the words "chariot" and "cherubim" are in apposition. So a sedan might be called a "carriage," and the masc. form מֶרְכָּב is used for the body of a litter. See, however, Dorjen, De cherub. Sanct. (ap. Ugolini, vol. viii), where the opposite opinion is ably supported. The glory symbolizing that presence which eye cannot see rests or rides on them, or one of them, thence dismounts to the temple threshold, and then departs and mounts again (Ezek. x, 4, 18; comp. ix, 3; Psa. xviii, 10). There is in them an entire absence of human sympathy, and even on the mercy-seat they probably appeared not merely as admiring and wondering (1 Pet. i, 12), but as guardians of the covenant and avengers of its breach. A single figure there would have suggested an idol, which two, especially when represented as regarding something greater than themselves, could not do. They thus became subordinate, like the supporters to a shield, and are repeated, as it were the distinctive bearings of divine heraldry — the mark, carved or wrought, everywhere on the house and furniture of God (Exod. xxv, 20; 1 Kings vi, 29, 35; vii, 29, 36). Those on the ark were to be placed with wings stretched forth, one at each end of the mercy-seat, and to be made "of the mercy-seat," which Abarbenel (Spencer, De leg. Heb. ritual. iii, diss. v) and others interpret of the same mass of gold with it, viz. wrought by hammering, not cast and then joined on. This seems doubtful; but from the word employed (מִקְשָׁה) the solidity of the metal may perhaps be inferred. They are called "cherubim of glory" (Heb ix, 5), as on them the glory, when visible, rested; but, whether thus visibly symbolized or not, a perpetual presence of God is attributed to the Holy of Holies. They were anointed with the holy oil, like the ark itself and the other sacred furniture. Their wings were to be stretched upwards, and their faces "towards each other and towards the mercy-seat." It is remarkable that with such precise directions as to their position, attitude, and material, nothing, save that they were winged, is said concerning their shape. See TABERNACLE.

Probable Form of the Cherubic Type.

IV. Their Meaning.—All, whether ancients or moderns, have agreed that the cherubim were symbolical, but they have greatly differed as to their figurative design; many regarding them as having a twofold significance, both physical and metaphysical. They were clearly intended, in a general sense, to represent divine existences in immediate contact with Jehovah. This was the view of Chrysostom, Ambrose, Augustine, and the fathers generally (Sixt. Senensis, Bibl. Sanct. p. 348), and the Pseudo Dionysius places them second (between seraphim and thrones) in the nine orders of the celestial hierarchy (Dionys. Areop. de Cælest. Hier. p. 5–9). The Cabalists, on the other hand, placed them ninth in their ten choirs of spirits (Buddæus, Philos. Hebr. p. 415). In a special sense, Philo regarded them as signifying the two hemispheres, and the flaming sword the motion of the planets, in which opinion he is joined by some moderns, who consider them to have been nothing more than astronomical emblems—the Lion and the Man being equivalent to Leo and Aquarius—the signs of the zodiac (Landseer, Sab. Researr. p. 315). Irenæus views them as emblematic of several things, such as the four elements, the four quarters of the globe, the four Gospels, the four universal covenants (adv. Hæres. iii, 11). Tertullian supposed that the cherubic figures, particularly the flaming sword, denoted the torrid zone (Apol. cap. 47). Justin Martyr imagined that the living creatures of Ezekiel were symbolical of Nebuchadnezzar, the Assyrian monarch, in his distress; when he ate grass like an ox, his hair was like a lion's, and his nails like a bird's claws (Quæst. xliv). Athanasius supposed that they were significant of the visible heavens (Quæst. ad Antiocl. cxxxv). The nature of the passages in which cherubim occur—passages poetical and highly wrought—the existence of exactly similar images among other nations, and the purely symbolic character of their form, has led not only Jewish allegorists like Philo, and Christian philosophers like Clemens of Alexandria, but even such writers as Hengstenberg, Keil, Neumann, etc., to deny them any personal reality; and in this way we may explain Zullich's definition of them as "mythical servants of Jehovah" (Die Cherubim-Wagen, Heidelberg, 1832). Thus, in the vision of Ezekiel, it is obvious that their animal shape and position implies subjection to the Almighty; that the four heads, uniting what were, according to the Jewish proverb, the four highest things in the world (Schoettgen's Hor. Hebr. ad Rev. iv), viz. the lion among beasts, the ox among cattle, the eagle among birds, and man among all, while God is the highest of all—constitute them the representative and quintessence of creation, placed in subordination to the great Creator (Leyrer, in Zeller's Wörterb. s. v.). The heads, too, represent not only creatures, perfect after their kind, but also perfect qualities, as love, constancy, magnanimity, sublimity, the free consciousness of man, the strong courage of the lion, the enduring strength of the ox, the rapid flight of the eagle (Hoffman); and possibly the number four may Ches'alon (Heb. Kesalon', כְּסָלוֹן, place of confidence; Sept. Χασαλών v. r. Χασλών), a place named as one of the landmarks on the west part of the north boundary of Judah, beyond Mt. Seir, and apparently situated on the shoulder (A. V. "side") of Mt. Jearim (Josh. xv, 10). This last, the "Mount of Forests," has not necessarily any connection with Kirjath-Jearim, though the two were evidently, from their proximity in this statement of the boundary, not far apart. See JEARIM. Chesalon was the next landmark to Bethshemesh, and it is quite in accordance with this that Dr. Robinson has observed a modern village named Kesla, about six miles to the N.E. of Ainshems, on the western mountains of Judah (Researches, ii, 364, note; Later Res. p. 154). Eusebius and Jerome, in the Onomasticon (s. v. Χαλασών, Chasion), mention a place of a similar name, but they differ as to its situation, the former placing it in Benjamin, the latter in Judah; both agree that it was a very large village in the neighborhood of Jerusalem. The position of the border-line at this point determines that it lay within Judah. See TRIBE.

Che'sed (Heb. Ke'sed, כֶּסֶד, of uncertain signif.; Sept. Χαζάδ, Vulg. Cased, Josephus Χάζαδος, Ant. i, 6, 5), the fourth of the eight sons of Nahor by Milcah (Gen. xxii, 22). B.C. cir. 2088. The name is the same as would be the sing. form of the Heb. for Chaldæans; but it is doubtful whether there is any connection. See CHALDÆA.

Che'sil (Heb. Kesil', כְּסִיל, a fool, i. e. profane, as in Psa. xlix, 11, and elsewhere; Sept. Χεσίλ v. r. Χασειρ and Βαιθήλ; Vulg. Cesil), a town in the extreme south of Palestine, named between Eltolad and Hormah (Josh. xv, 30). In the list of towns given out of Judah to Simeon, the name BETHUL (q. v.) occurs in place of it (xix, 4), as if the one were identical with, or a corruption of, the other. This is confirmed by the reading of 1 Chron. iv, 30, BETHUEL; by that of the Sept. as given above, and by the mention in 1 Sam. xxx, 27, of a BETHEL among the cities of the extreme south. It is merely mentioned by Eusebius and Jerome in the Onomasticon (s. v. Χοιλή, Chisil). See also URION.

Chesnut. See CHESTNUT.

Chest is the rendering in certain passages in the Auth. Vers. of two distinct Hebrew terms: 1. אָרוֹן or אָרֹן, aron' (from אָרַר, to gather; Sept. κιβωτός, Vulg. gazophylacium), invariably used for the Ark (q. v.) of the Covenant, and, with two exceptions, for that only. (It is instructive to be reminded that there is no connection whatever between this word and that for the "ark" of Noah, and for the "ark" in which Moses was hid among the flags [both תֵּבָה, tebah]). The two exceptions alluded to are (a) the "coffin" or mummy-case in which the bones of Joseph were carried from Egypt (Gen. i, 26; rendered in the Targum of Ps.-Jon. by γλώσσοκομον—compare John xii, 6—in Hebrew letters: the reading of the whole passage is very singular); and (b) the "chest" in which Jehoiada the priest collected the alms for the repairs of the Temple (2 Kings xii, 9, 10; 2 Chron. xxiv, 8-11). See COFFIN. 2. גְּנָזִים, genazim' (only in the plur.; from גָּנַז, to hoard, "chests," Ezek. xxvii, 24; "treasures," Esth. iii, 9; iv, 7).

Many boxes of various forms have been discovered among the Egyptian monuments. Some of these had lids resembling the curved summit of a royal canopy, and were ornamented with the usual cornice; others had a simple flat cover, and some few a pointed summit, resembling the shelving roof of a house. The sides were secured with wooden nails and glue, and dovetailed together. This last kind of lid was divided into two parts, one of which alone opened, turning on two small pins at the base, on the principle of the doors of their houses and temples; and, when necessary, the two knobs at the top could be tied together and sealed. These boxes were frequently of costly materials, veneered with rare woods, or made of ebony inlaid with ivory, painted with various devices, or stained to imitate materials of a valuable nature; and the mode of fastening the lid, and the curious substitute for a hinge given to some of them, show that the former was entirely removed, and that the box remained open while used. When not veneered, or inlaid with rare wood, the sides and lid were painted, and those intended for the tombs, to be deposited there in honor of the deceased, had usually funereal inscriptions or religious subjects painted upon them, among which were offerings presented by members of their family. (See Wilkinson, Anc. Eg. i, 163; ii, 116, abridgment.) See BOX.

Chester, an ancient city of England, on the river Dee, founded by the Romans. In the 13th century it had several monasteries, a college, and the hospitals of St. Anne and of St. John Baptist, the latter of which remains to this day. Under Henry VIII the Church of the monastery of St. Wesburgh became the Cathedral for the new see of Chester, which took in Cheshire (from the diocese of Litchfield) and Lancashire (from the diocese of York). The revenues of the dissolved monasteries were made a provision for the bishop, dean, and chapter. The present (1867) bishop is William Jacobson, DD., consecrated in 1865.

Chestnut-TREE (עַרְמוֹן, armon'; Chald. חַלְגּוֹב, Sept. πλάτανος [but in Ezek. ἰλάτη], Vulg. platanus), mentioned among the "speckled rods" which Jacob placed in the watering-troughs before the sheep (Gen xxx, 37); its grandeur is indicated in Ezek. xxxi, 8 (as well as in Ecclus. xxiv, 19), as one of the trees to which the Assyrian empire in its strength and beauty is likened, it being there noted for its magnificence, shooting its high boughs aloft. This description agrees well with the plane-tree (Platanus Orientalis), which is adopted by the above ancient translators, to which modern critical opinion inclines, and which actually grows in Palestine (see Ritter, Erdk. xi, 511 sq.). The beech, the maple, and the chestnut have been adopted, in different modern versions, as representing the Hebrew armon, but scarcely any one now doubts that it means the plane-tree. It may be remarked that this tree is in Genesis associated with others—the willow and the poplar—whose habits agree with it; they are all trees of the low grounds, and love to grow where the soil is rich and humid. This is strikingly illustrated by the fact that Russel (N. H. of Aleppo, i, 47) expressly names the plane, the willow, and the poplar (along with the ash) as trees which grow in the same situations near Aleppo. But this congruity would be lost if the chestnut were understood, as that tree prefers dry and hilly situations. There is a latent beauty also in the passage in Ezekiel, where, in describing the greatness and glory of Assyria, the prophet says, "The armon-trees were not like his boughs, nor any tree in the garden of God like unto him for beauty." This not only expresses the grandeur of the tree, but is singularly appropriate, from the fact that the plane-trees (chenors, as they are called) in the plains of Assyria are of extraordinary size and beauty, in both respects exceeding even those of Palestine (comp. Plin. xii, 3; xvii, 18; Virg. Georg. iv, 146; Cicero, Orat. i, 7; Statius, Sylv. ii, 3, 29 sq.; Martial, ix, 61, 5). Moreover, the etymology of the word connects it with עָרֹם, aram', "to be naked," and with Arab. 'aram, "to strip off bark," the shedding of its bark yearly being characteristic of the plane-tree (see Hiller in Hierophyt. i, 402). The account here given is chiefly from Kitto's Cyclop. s. v. Armon.

Oriental Plane-tree (Platanus Orientalis).

The Oriental plane-tree ranks in the Linnæan class and order Monœcia Polyandria, and in the natural order among the Platanaceæ. Westernmost Asia is its native country, although, according to Prof. Royle, it extends as far eastward as Cashmere. The stem is tall, erect, and covered with a smooth bark which annually falls off. The flowers are small and scarcely distinguishable: they come out a little before the leaves. The wood of the plane-tree is fine-grained, hard, and rather brittle than tough; when old, it is said to acquire dark veins, and to take the appearance of walnut-wood. In those situations which are favorable to its growth, huge branches spread out in all directions from the massive trunk, invested with broad, deeply-divided, and glossy green leaves. This body of rich foliage, joined to the smoothness of the stem and the symmetry of the general growth, renders the plane-tree one of the noblest objects in the vegetable kingdom. It has now, and had also of old (Plin. Nat. Hist. xii, 1), the reputation of being the tree which most effectually excludes the sun's beams in summer and most readily admits them in winter, thus affording the best shelter from the extremes of both seasons. For this reason it was planted near public buildings and palaces, a practice which the Greeks and Romans adopted; and the former delighted to adorn with it their academic walks and places of public exercise. In the East the plane seems to have been considered sacred, as the oak was formerly in Britain. This distinction is in most countries awarded to the most magnificent species of tree which it produces (see Kitto, Nat. Hist. of Palest. p. ccxlix). In Palestine, for instance, where the plane does not appear to have been very common, the terebinth seems to have possessed pre-eminence. See OAK. In the celebrated story of Xerxes arresting the march of his grand army before a noble plane-tree in Lydia, that he might render honor to it, and adorn its boughs with golden chains, bracelets, and other rich ornaments, the action was misunderstood and egregiously misrepresented by Ælian (Var. Hist. ii, 14). The Oriental plane endures more northern climates well, and grows to a fine tree, but not to the enormous size which it sometimes attains in the East. Pausanias (l. viii, c. 23) notices a noble plane in Arcadia, the planting of which was ascribed, by tradition, to Menelaus. Pliny (Nat. Hist. xii, 1) mentions one in Lycia, in the trunk of which had gradually been formed an immense cavern, eighty feet in circumference. L. Mutianus, thrice consul and governor of the province, with eighteen other persons, often dined and supped commodiously within it. Caligula also had a tree of this sort at his villa, near Velitræ, the hollow of which accommodated fifteen persons at dinner, with a proper suite of attendants. The emperor called it "his nest;" and it is highly probable that his friend, Herod Agrippa, may occasionally have been one of the fifteen birds who nestled there along with him. A fine specimen of the plane-tree was growing a few years ago (1844) at Vostitza, on the Gulf of Lepanto: it measured forty-six feet in circumference, according to the Rev. S. Clark, of Battersea, who has given an interesting account of it in John's Forest Trees of Britain (ii, 206). The plane-trees of Palestine in ancient days were probably more numerous than they are now, though modern travellers occasionally refer to them. Belon (Obs. Sing. ii, 105), La Roque (Voy. de Syrie, p. 197–199), and others, mention the groves of noble planes which adorn the plain of Antioch; and the last-named traveller records a night's rest which he enjoyed under planes of great beauty in a valley of Lebanon (p. 76). Buckingham names them among the trees which line the Jabbok (Travels in Palestine, ii, 108). Evelyn (in his Sylva) seems to ascribe the introduction of the plane-tree into England to the great Lord Bacon, who planted some which were still flourishing at Verulam in 1706. This was, perhaps, the first plantation of any note; but it appears from Turner's Herbal (published in 1551)

Branch of the Plane-tree.

that the tree was known and cultivated in that country before the chancellor was born. The Platanus Orientalis, or plane of Palestine and of classical antiquity, must not be confounded with the plane-tree commonly so called in Scotland and England. This last is a maple, Acer pseudo-platanus, and, like the rest of its saccharine family, it contains a sweet sap in the liburnum or under bark, for the sake of which it is often tapped by school-boys in spring. Even by those least familiar with plants, the false plane or sycamore may on her shoulder. The former mode appears to be alluded to in several places, and the latter in Isa. xlix, 22. (See Hackett's Illustrations of Script. p. 57.)

In Scripture the word "child," or "children," has considerable latitude: disciples are often called children or sons. Solomon, in his Proverbs, says to his disciple, "Hear, my son;" so also our Saviour (John xxi, 5). The descendants of a man, how remote soever, are denominated his sons or children, as "the children of Edom," "the children of Moab," "the children of Israel." Such expressions as "the children of light," "the children of darkness," "the children of the kingdom," signify those who follow truth, those who remain in error, and those who belong to the Church. Persons arrived almost at the age of maturity are sometimes called children. Thus Joseph is termed "the child," though he was at least sixteen years old (Gen. xxxvii, 30), and Benjamin, even when above thirty, was so denominated (Gen. xliv, 20). Solomon called himself a little child when he came to the kingdom of his father (1 Kings iii, 7). See ADOPTION; BIRTH; SON; INHERITANCE; EDUCATION, etc.; and comp. OFFSPRING.

CHILD OF GOD. The terms "child," "children," "babe," etc., are used in the N. T. in the following senses:

I. Psychologically these terms are used to denote a state of ignorance and of intellectual narrowness or darkness (Matt. xi, 16; Luke vii, 32; 1 Cor. xiii, 11: "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child;" xiv, 20: "Brethren, be not children in understanding;" Eph. iv, 14: "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro," etc.; Heb. v, 13: "For every one that useth milk, is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe").

II. In the ethical sense, they are used, in the abstract, to designate a state of innocence, and, in the concrete, to signify the totality of children, towards whom holy duties are to be fulfilled by the community, and particularly by parents. We see even that the appellation "children" is used by the Lord as an expression of his greatest love (Mark x, 24). Children are then distinguished by moral preference; yet from this it does not follow that they are holy, but merely that they are yet uncontaminated by actual contact with the world. They are, therefore, partly to be imitated, partly to be restrained, and in all cases to be the objects of the greatest moral solicitude. As duties of parents towards children, the N. T. names the providing for their wants, giving them good examples, and bringing them up in the fear and knowledge of the Lord. Children, on the other hand, are to be obedient to their parents. That the N. T. does not give a more systematic view of the relative moral duties of parents and children is to be accounted for on the ground that where faith and love are found, all the rest follows naturally (Matt. vii, 9–11; Luke xi, 11: "What man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?" xviii, 1–5; Mark ix, 34; Luke ix, 47, 48: "At the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven; and whoso shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me"). See also Mark x, 13–16; Matt. xix, 13–15; Luke xviii, 15–17; 2 Cor. xii, 14; Eph. vi, 1–4; Col. iii, 20, 21.

III. In the spiritual sense, the expression "children" designates those who have become children of God through Christ. To be a child of God through Christ is to have attained the highest (moral) perfection, and the greatest degree of holiness of which human nature is susceptible. This consciousness of its holy purity is one of the characteristics of Christianity (Matt. xi, 19; Luke vii, 33–35: "The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold, a man gluttonous, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners. But Wisdom is justified of her children;" i. e. those whom Christ recognises as his prove by words and deeds that they are the children of wisdom. See also Matt. v, 9; xv, 26; John i, 12; Rom. viii, 14–17: "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together;" Rom. ix, 8; Gal. iii, 26; iv, 5, 6; Eph. i, 5; Phil. ii, 15; 1 John iii, 1, 2, 9, 10; v, 1, 2; Eph. iii, 15; Luke xx, 36; Rom. viii, 23, etc.). —Krehl, Handwörterb. d. N. T. s. v. See ADOPTION.

Childbirth (τεκνογονία, "child-bearing"). The throes of accouchement appear in Gen. iii, 16, to be part of the doom incurred by woman for her agency in the fall in Eden. Her passive lot in thus continuing the race is aptly expressed in that primeval sentence: "Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." See COHABITATION. The language of the apostle in 1 Tim. ii, 15, implies that a patient endurance of this penalty shall contribute to woman's spiritual benefit. The Prayer-book of the Church of England prescribes a form of public thanksgiving to be offered for women after safe delivery in childbed. See BIRTH; CHURCHING.

Childs, JOHN WESLEY, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, was born in Calvert Co., Md., in 1800. In 1814 he went to Richmond, Va., where he was employed as a clerk. In 1826 he received license as a local preacher; in 1827 he entered the Baltimore Conference on probation; and in 1829 he was admitted into full connection. In 1844, when the Methodist Episcopal Church was divided on the slavery question, he adhered to the Southern Church, and continued to serve in important appointments up to the year of his death. He died May 9, 1850, at Norfolk, Va., in great peace. "His highest distinction lay in his extraordinary spirituality, his deadness to the world, his devotion to Christ; and in this respect it may reasonably be doubted whether he has had his superior in modern times."—Sprague, Annals, vii, 729.

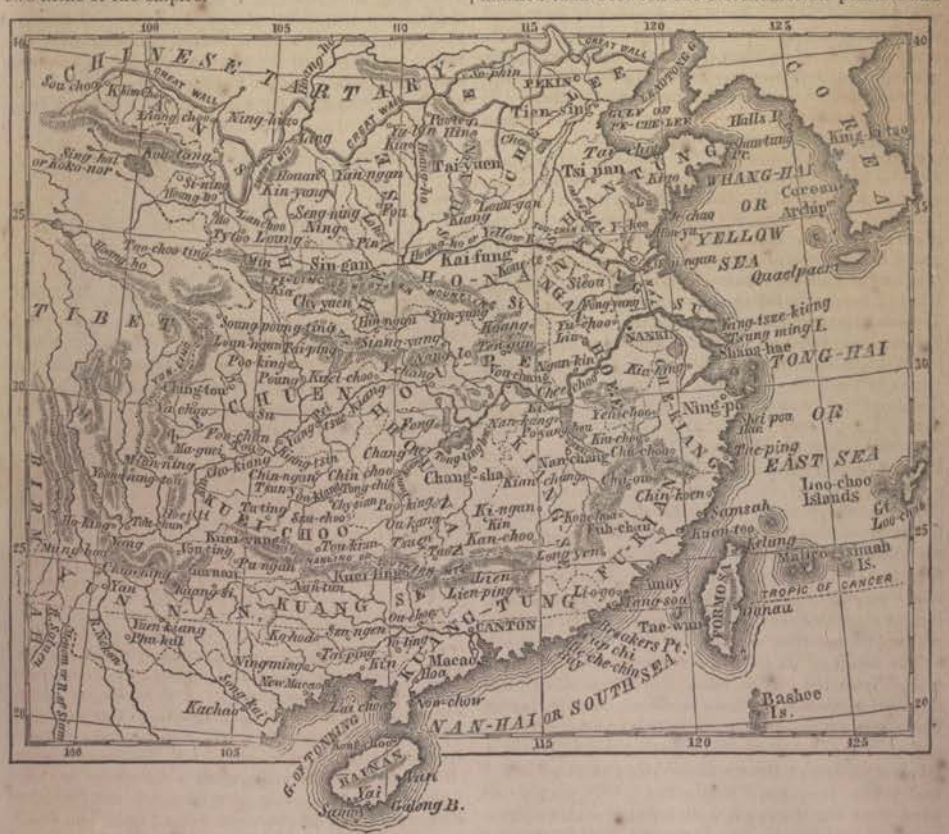
"chimneys in Sion" of the Apocrypha (2 Esdr. vi, 4, caminus). See FURNACE.

China (see SINIM), a vast country of Asia, extending (including its dependencies) from 20° to 56° N., and from 144° 50′ E. to 90° E. Its area is over four and a half million square miles, including one third of Asia, and nearly one tenth of the habitable globe. The empire is divided into three principal parts: first, the eighteen provinces; second, Manchooria; third, colonial possessions. The last includes Mongolia, Sungaria, Eastern Turkistan, Roko-nor, and Thibet. The second is the native country of the Manchoos, the reigning family in China, and includes the territory lying east of the Inner Duarian Mountains, and north of the Gulf of Lian Yung. The first division is China Proper (between 18° and 40° N. lat., including Hainan on the south; and between 98° and 124° E. long.). It is the only part settled by Chinese. "It lies on the eastern slope of the high table-land of Central Asia, and in the south-east angle of the continent, and for beauty of scenery, fertility of soil, salubrity of climate, magnificent and beautiful rivers, and variety and abundance of its productions, will compare with any portion of the globe" (Williams, Middle Kingdom, i, 7). Its estimated area is nearly 2,000,000 square miles, or two fifths of the empire.



Map of China Proper.

I. Population, Usages, etc.—The total population of China Proper was 371 millions in 1815, 396 millions in 1852, and is at present estimated at 410 or 420 millions.

This vast population has an ancient and peculiar civilization. The Chinese are generally classed in the Mongolian variety of the human race. "A tawny or parchment-colored skin, black hair, lank and coarse, a thin beard, oblique eyes, and high cheek-bones, are the principal characteristics of the race. Of the general character of the Chinese, it is not easy to form a fair and impartial judgment; and those who have resided long in the country, and know them well, have arrived at very different conclusions. M. Huc asserts that they are 'destitute of religious feelings and beliefs,' 'skeptical and indifferent to everything that concerns the moral side of man,' 'their whole lives but materialism put in action;' but 'all this,' says Mr. Meadows (The Chinese and their Rebellions, Lond. 1856), 'is baseless calumny of the higher life of a great portion of the human race.' He admits, indeed, that these charges are true of the mass of the Chinese, just as they are true of the English, French, and Americans; but as among these there is a large amount of generosity and right feeling, and also 'a minority higher in nature, actuated by higher motives, aiming at higher aims,' so also, he maintains, is there among the Chinese a similar right feeling, and a like minority who live a higher life than the people generally. The Chinese are, as a race, unwarlike, fond of peace and domestic order, capable of a high degree of organization and local self-government, sober, industrious, practical, unimaginative, literary, and deeply imbued with the mercantile spirit. It is to be observed that the inhabitants of China Proper are essentially one people, the differences, except in dialect, being hardly more marked than between the Northumbrian peasant and the Cornish miner. The south-eastern Chinese—the people of Kwang-tung, Fuh-keen, and the south of Che-keang—are the most restless and enterprising in all the eighteen provinces, and may be regarded as the Anglo-Saxons of Asia. In the mountainous districts of the four south-eastern provinces of China, but principally in Kwang-se, are certain tribes who maintain a rude independence, wear a peculiar dress, and are descended from the aboriginal inhabitants of China. Of these the Meaou-tze are the best known.

ceeded at first one, then two, then three divine natures (Ki, Hi, Quei). His moral teaching is that man is to enjoy life, the highest aim being to become free from external evils and from inward cares. In this religion (the followers of which are called Tao-sse, Tauists) we find a belief in spirits having an influence over the destinies of man. After death the material part only of man belongs to the earth; the higher and lower spiritual parts (Ling and Hu-en) pass, after this life, into different spirits. Each place has its tutelar spirits; bad spirits always lead man into evil, but they are confined to the earth. This religion has a particular priesthood (in the higher degrees of which celibacy is enforced), and a great number of temples. It was originally embraced by the higher and richer classes, but has much degenerated of late, and its priests have become little better than jugglers.

"Sang Ching, the 'Three Pure Ones,' is the title of certain three idols found in temples belonging to the Tauist religion and worshipped by Tauist priests. The images are seated side by side. One of them, as some explain, represents Lŏ-chŭ, or the 'Old Boy,' the founder of that religion. Others explain that the three images refer to three different incarnations of Lŏ-chŭ. There is very little known among the common people about these divinities, and they are very seldom worshipped by them. Tauist priests of both classes universally worship the Three Pure Ones" (Doolittle, Social Life of the Chinese, i, 249).

4. Buddha.—The third religion of China is that of Fo, or Buddha, introduced from India about the year A.D. 65, which, however, became commingled with the remains of the old Chinese religion and with the maxims of Confucius. With the great majority of the people it has sunk into a coarse idolatry. The Dalai Lama is in China replaced by the Ban-dschi-in-er-de-ni as the spiritual head. The priests are called bonzes (Chinese Seng or Ho-shang), and number more than one million. The lower orders of priests are ignorant, live in convents, and go about begging; the higher orders (Ta-ho-shang) are educated, and obliged to study their religious books. There are also female bonzes, living in convents like the Romanist nuns. The temples are either mere chapels, or else large edifices surrounded by columns, at the end of which is a hall (Ting) containing the image of the god. The larger temples are merely a reunion of several smaller ones, having in the corners pavilions two stories high, in which the image of the god is kept, and which are surmounted by pyramidal octagonal towers (Taa) 7 to 10 stories in height, each story being separated from the next by a cornice projecting in imitation of a Chinese roof, and from each angle of which depend dragon-heads and bells. By the side of the hall are the cells of the bonzes, and accommodations for a number of animals. On occasions of great ceremony, such as the feast of the temple of Te-en (Heaven) and Te (Earth), at Pekin, the New Year's day offering, the equinox, the processions of July and August in honor of rain, the feast of the dead, and the emperor's plowing (which is also considered as a religious ceremony), the emperor officiates as high-priest. Buddhism, although the religion of the emperor, is not the religion of the state, and is actually only tolerated, like the Tao-sse. Both systems have been so much altered by the influence of the doctrine of Confucius that the three religions can morally be considered as but one.

Religion (so far as professing it is concerned) is in China confined principally to the educated classes, somewhat like science in other countries. The great mass of the people live on without making any distinction between the different religions, and pray in any temple without inquiring as to its form of worship. But the only worship which really seems to carry the minds and hearts of the people with it is the filial worship of ancestors.

"The hall of ancestors is found in the house of almost every member of the family, but always in that of the eldest son. In rich families it is a separate building, in others a room set apart for the purpose, and in many a mere shelf or shrine. The tablet consists of a board called chin chu, i. e. house of the spirit, about twelve inches long and three wide, placed upright in a block, and having the name, quality, and date of birth and death carved in the wood. A receptacle is often cut

In the account of Herod's voyage to join Marcus Agrippa in the Black Sea, we are told (Josephus, Ant. xvi, 2, 2) that, after passing by Rhodes and Cos, he was detained some time by north winds at Chios, and sailed on to Mitylene when the winds became more favorable. It appears that during this stay at Chios Herod gave very liberal sums towards the restoration of some public works which had suffered in the Mithridatic war. This island does not appear to have any other association with the Jews, nor is it specially mentioned in connection with the first spread of Christianity by the apostles. When Paul was there, on the occasion referred to, he did not land, but only passed the night at anchor (Conybeare and Howson, St. Paul, ii, 211). At that time Chios enjoyed the privilege of freedom (Plin. v, 38; comp. xvi, 6), and it is not certain that it ever was politically a part of the Roman proconsular Asia. No record exists of its connection with Christianity in apostolic times; but after the lapse of ages we read of a bishop of Chios, showing that the Gospel had obtained a footing on the shores. Its length is about 32 miles, and in breadth it varies from 8 to 18 (having a periphery of 900 stadia, Strabo, xiv, 645, or 120 Italian miles, Tournefort, Voy. ii, 84). Its outline is mountainous and bold, and it has always been celebrated for its beauty and fruitfulness (Arvieux, Voy. vi, 169; Schubert, Reis. i, 414). It is very fertile in cotton, silk, and fruit, and was anciently celebrated for its wine (Pliny, xiv, 9; xvii, 34, 22; Strabo, xiv, 637; Horace, Od. iii, 19, 5; Virg. Ecl. v, 7; Athen. iv, 167; i, 32) and mastic (Pliny, xii, 36; xxiv, 74; Dioscor. i, 90). The principal town was also called Chios, and had the advantage of a good harbor (Strabo, xiv, p. 645). The island is now called by the Greeks Khio, and by the Italians Scio (Hamilton, Researches, ii, 5; Thevenot, Travels, i, 93; Chandler, Asia Minor, c. 16; Clarke, Trav. iii, 236; Sonnini, Trav. c. 37; Olivier, Voy. ii, 103). The wholesale massacre and enslavement of the inhabitants by the Turks in 1822 forms one of the most shocking incidents of the Greek war of independence (Hughes, Tract on Gr. Revolution, Lond. 1822). See also Malte Brun, Geography, ii, 86 sq.; Mannert, Geogr. VI, iii, 323 sq.; Hassel, Erdbeschr. xiii, 161 sq.; Cellarii Notit. ii, 19; Smith's Dict. of Class. Geogr. s. v.; M'Culloch's Gazetteer, s. v. Scio. See ASIA MINOR.

Coin of Chios.

Chis'leu (Heb. Kislev', כִּסְלֵו, according to some, from Arabic, i. q. lethargic; according to others [Benfey, Monatsnamen, Berl. 1836], of Persic origin; and as it appears on the Palmyrene Inscription [ed. Swinton, Philos. Transactions, xlviii, tab. 29] in the form כסלול, i. e. Kislul, it probably represents the name of the third of the Amshaspands or celestial genii [Bournouf, Commentaire sur le Yasna, p. 146, 151, 174]; Sept. Χασελεῦ, Anglicized "Casleu" in 1 Macc. i, 54; iv, 59; Chaldee כִּסְלֵיו, Targ. on Eccl. xi, 3; Josephus Χασλεῦ or Χασλεβ, Ant. iii, 5, 4; 7, 6), the name adopted from the Babylonians, after the Captivity, by the Jews for the third civil or ninth ecclesiastical month (Neh. i, 1; Zech. vii, 1), corresponding to the Macedonian month Apellæus (Ἀπελλαῖος; see Spanheim in Havercamp's Josephus, ii, 407), and answering mainly to the moon of November. See MONTH. The following were the days specially memorable for religious exercises: On the 3d, a fast in memory of the idols which the Asmonæans cast out of the Temple; on the 7th, a fast instituted because king Jehoiakim burned the prophecy of Jeremiah, which Baruch had written (Jer. xxxvi, 23). Scaliger believes that it was instituted on account of Zedekiah's having his eyes put out, after his children had been slain in his sight. This fast Prideaux places on the 29th of the month; but Calmet, with the modern Jews, makes it the 6th, and places on the 7th a festival in memory of the death of Herod the Great, the son of Antipater. There is also some dispute whether this fast was not observed on the 28th of the month. It is an argument in favor of the earlier day that the other would fall in the middle of the eight days' Festival of the Dedication.

On the 25th, the Chanuca, or feast of Dedication (q. v.), so called (John x, 22), and kept as a minor festival in commemoration of the dedication of the altar after the cleansing of the Temple from the pollution of Antiochus by Judas Maccabæus, by whom it was ordered to be observed (1 Macc. iv, 59). This feast lasted eight days. A prayer for the world in general is offered up on the eighth day of the feast. In this month the winter prayer for rain commences; the precise day is sixty days after the autumnal equinox, by the calculations of Rab Samuel, which varies from the 2d to the 6th, but is generally on the 4th of December. See CALENDAR.

Chis'lon (Heb. Kislon', כִּסְלֹן, confidence; Sept. Χασλών), the father of Elidad, which latter was one of the princes of Benjamin, selected on the part of that tribe by Jehovah to divide Canaan (Num. xxxiv, 21). B.C. ante 1618.

Chis'loth-ta'bor (Hebrew Kisloth' Tabor', כִּסְלֹת תָּבֹר, flanks of Tabor; Sept. Χασαλωθθαβώρ v. r. Χασελωθαίθ and Χασαλὼθ-βαθώρ, Vulg. Ceseleth-thabor), a place to the "border" (גְּבוּל), of which the "border" (גְּבוּל) of Zebulon extended eastward from Sarid on the southern boundary (Josh. xix, 12), apparently outside its territory, at the western foot of Mt. Tabor. See TRIBE. It is probably the same elsewhere called simply CHESULLOTH (Josh. xix, 18) and TABOR (1 Chron. vi, 7), and seems to be identical with the Chesalus (Χιαλοῦς, Chasalus) of the Onomasticon (s. v. Ἀχισελώθ, Achaseluth; comp. s. vv. Χισελαθθαβώρ, Chaselatabor; Χασελοῦς τοῦ Θαβώρ, Chaselath), near Mt. Tabor, in the plain [of Esdraelon], 8 R. miles E. of Diocæsarea; also with the Xaloth (Ξαλώθ) mentioned by Josephus (War, iii, 3, 1; comp. Life, 44) as a village in the great plain, and one of the landmarks of lower Galilee (comp. Zunz, On the Geography of Palestine from Jewish Sources in Asher's Benj. of Tudela, ii, 432; and Seetzen's Reisen durch Syrien, iv, 311). See AZNOTH-TABOR. It is doubtless the modern Iksal, seen by Dr. Robinson on his way from Nablous to Nazareth, "in the plain toward Sahor, on a low rocky ridge or mound, not far from the foot of the northern hills, described as containing many excavated sepulchres" (Researches, iii, 182). It was also observed by De Saulcy, while passing through the plain of Esdraelon towards Nain, "to the left, and distant a little more than a league, built at the foot of the mountains of Nazareth" (Narrative, i, 74). Pococke (ii, 65) mentions a village which he calls Zal, about three miles from Tabor.

dowed above their fellows. Is it then irrational to suppose that in view of the great work which Christ came to do, he would be superior in purity to those whom he sought to elevate?

In all the relations of his life on earth, Jesus always did what was due to them. He did not seek, in virtue of the connection of his humanity in one personality with his divinity, to exempt his human nature from the influences which legitimately operate on it; but meeting fully life's duties as they came to him, he asserted in himself the triumph of one unfallen nature over the power of evil in the world. Thus his perfect holiness of life stands out clearly in the moral heavens, the unchanging, ever-brilliant star of hope whose light no cloud can ever dim, a safe and surely-guiding beacon to those who traverse the sea of life in search for the Promised Land.

Christ, Order of, KNIGHTS OF THE. After the abolition of the order of Knights Templars, in 1312, king Dionysius of Portugal left to such as resided in his dominions a large share of their estates, and in 1317 reconstituted them into a new spiritual order of "Knights of Christ." It was sanctioned by Pope John XXII on condition of obedience to the papal see. He also instituted a branch of the order in the Papal States. The knights were secularized in Portugal in 1789, and divided into three classes: "great crosses," of which there were 6; "commanders," numbering 450; and knights, the number of which was unlimited. The distinctive marks of the order are a golden cross, carved and ornamented with red enamel, the ends terminating in two points; a scarlet band, which, by the papal knights, is carried around the neck. The Portugal grand crosses wear a particular dress on great occasions, with a golden chain wound three times around the neck, but which is usually thrown across the shoulder from right to left; a band; and on the breast a star, containing in its centre the cross of the order. The commanders and knights wear a similar but smaller cross, the former in a star and on the breast, with the band; the latter pending from the button-hole, and without the star. As a religious order, they have been suppressed, with all such orders, in Portugal.—Pierer, Universal-Lexikon, s. v.; Chambers, Encyclopædia, s. v.

Christendom, the kingdom of Christ in its diffusion among men on the earth. In the way of territorial extension, Christendom has been enlarging almost without interruption from the beginning. In the second and third centuries congregations were established in all parts of the Roman empire, and beyond the limits of the empire it collected churches in Parthia, Persia, and India, and extended to several barbarous nations whose languages had never been reduced to writing. The conversion of Constantine established the first Christian state. By A.D. 423 the whole eastern portion of the Roman empire was free from paganism, which lingered a little longer in the western, without, however, disputing any longer the ascendency. In the fifth and sixth centuries Christianity conquered in great part Northern Africa, Spain, Gaul, Scotland, England, and a number of the German tribes. The erection of the empire of Charlemagne paved the way for the conversion of Northern Europe. The Saxons consented to accept Christianity in 803, and Scandinavia in the tenth and eleventh centuries. Thence it spread soon to Iceland and Greenland. The conversion of the Sclavonians of Eastern Europe commenced in the ninth century, and was nearly completed in the twefth. In the tenth and eleventh centuries the dissemination of Christianity in Hungary, Transylvania, and Russia commenced. At the same time, its territory was lessened in Western Asia, Northern Africa, and a part of Southern Europe, by the progress of Mohammedanism. In the period from the eleventh to the sixteenth century the conversion of Northern Europe, and in particular of Pomerania, Esthonia, and Livonia, was completed. A part of Eastern Europe, however, was gained by the Mohammedans, but, on the other hand, a large new territory was secured to Christianity in Western Africa, East India, and America, in connection with the discoveries of the Portuguese and Spaniards. After the sixteenth century the newly-discovered continent of America began to be filled up by a Christian population, thus making the second Christian continent. The Roman Church for some time seemed successful in Christianizing Eastern Asia, especially China and Japan, but its progress was stopped by persecution. In the eighteenth century a new Christian state sprang up in South Africa, in connection with the political rule of the Dutch and the English. The nineteenth century opened with brighter prospects than any preceding. In South Africa the territory of Christian nations extended; in Western Africa, Liberia was founded as a Christian republic; in Northern Africa, Algeria is filling up with a Christian population; and in Eastern Africa, Abyssinia, which, in spite of its isolation, has preserved since the fourth century a kind of Christianity, promises to re-enter the union of the Christian states. Australia has already become the third Christian division of the world, with only a few weak remnants of paganism. In Asia the Karens of Farther India have been brought under the influence of Christianity, while in the north nearly one third of the continent forms part of a Christian state. Thus the territory of Christianity at present comprises three out of the five large divisions of the world, with a considerable part of the two others. Moreover, large territories in Asia and Africa, though not yet Christianized, are under the dominion of Christian nations, and hardly a single country is at present left into which Christian missionaries have not forced their way. Thus the time seems near when the extent of Christendom will coincide with the extent of the earth. The following estimate of the Christian population of the world is based upon the latest (1868) works on political and ecclesiastical statistics:

	Total Population.	Roman Catholic.	Protestant.	Christian.
America....	72,800,000	42,700,000	27,500,000	70,200,000
Europe.....	287,000,000	140,200,000	67,200,000	274,200,000
Asia	798,600,000	4,600,000	700,000	12,900,000
Africa.....	188,000,000	1,100,000	700,000	4,900,000
Australasia, Polynesia..	3,800,000	400,000	1,000,000	1,400,000
	1,350,200,000	189,000,000	97,100,000	363,600,000

from the chambers. It was separated from the chancel by a partition or lattice-work, with a curtain, and the entrance to the choir was by folding-doors in this partition. These doors were provided with curtains, which, as well as the larger curtain, called καταπέτασμα and καταπέτασμα μυστικόν, were drawn aside during the celebration of the Eucharist, and during the delivery of the sermon.

3. The Narthex, or Ante-temple.—This was the outer division within the walls. It was called πρόναος, ante-temple; πρόπυλα, portico; and νάρθηξ, or ferula. The latter name is supposed to have been given it in consequence of its oblong shape, resembling in this respect a ferula, or rod. It was an oblong section of the building, extending quite across the front of the church. It was entered by three doors leading from the outer porch. The great entrance was at the west, opposite to the altar; it was called (after the corresponding part of the temple) ὡραία or βασιλική, the beautiful or royal gate. The vestibule, or πρόναος, in the stricter sense, was allotted to the catechumens and penitents. Heretics and unbelievers were also allowed a place here, though this was forbidden by some Eastern synods. The πρόπυλα, or portico, was chiefly used for the performance of funerals. But, in the larger churches, meetings on ecclesiastical affairs were held in it. The primitive Christians were accustomed to wash before entering a church, as a symbol of the purity becoming that holy place. In due time the vessel used for that purpose was introduced into the porch. The vessel

1. Propylæum, or vestibulum magnum, the great porch, or first entrance into the area before the church. 2. The atrium, or area leading from the porch to the church. 3. Cantharus, or phiala: the fountain of water in the middle of the square. 4. The porticoes, or cloisters about the area, otherwise called the exterior narthex of the church, and place of mourners. 5. The great gate into the church. 6. The two smaller gates on each side of the other. 7. The northern and southern gates. 8. The cloisters on the north and south sides of the church. 9. The inner narthex, where the catechumens and hearers stood. 10. The place of the substrati, behind the ambo. 11. The ambo, or reading-desk. 12. The ascent on both sides of the ambo. 13. The inner porticoes, or cloisters for men below. 14. The catechumenia, or hyperoa, upper galleries for women, above the portions of the men, upon pillars. 15. Cancelli lunati, the rails of the chancel. 16. Bema, or chancel. 17. The altar, or communion-table. 18. The arched canopy over the altar. 19. The bishop's throne. 20. The seats of presbyters, in a semicircle about the altar. 21. Diaconicum minus, the inner vestry. 22. Prothesis, or paratorium. 23. Diaconicum magnum, the great repository, or greeting-house. 24. The baptistery. 25. The font. 26. Pastophoria, dwelling-houses, libraries, school-rooms, etc. 27. Exedræ, outer buildings. 28. Περίβολος, the outermost boundary allowed for refuge, or sanctuary.

The government of the order was in the hands of twenty-five definitores, the first of whom was the abbot of Citeaux, who, as abbot general, was the head of the whole order. Next to him in dignity were the abbots La Ferté, Pontigny, Clairvaux, and Morimond, the four oldest convents after Citeaux. The abbot of Citeaux appointed four other definitores. The abbots of La Ferté, Pontigny, Clairvaux, and Morimond nominated together twenty (five each), four of whom, i. e. one of each nomination, were rejected by the abbot general. The legislative assembly, called the General Chapter, met originally annually. They did not settle in any diocese before the bishop had accepted the Charta Charitatis, the fundamental law of the order, which had been given in 1119 by abbot Stephen of Citeaux. In 1143 the king of Portugal imposed upon his whole kingdom the duties of vassalage towards the abbey of Clairvaux, so that (in 1578) claims were laid by the latter to all Portugal. The decay of the Cistercians began with the rise of the mendicant orders. Their history consists mostly in efforts of popes and some abbots to stay the flood of corruption which early overflowed the whole order. These efforts were usually unsuccessful, but led to the establishment of a number of reformed congregations, which received from the popes the privilege of an independent organization. The most important are those founded in Spain in 1469, in Tuscany in 1497, and that founded by pope Urban VIII in 1630. The present number of abbeys is very limited. There were in 1843 16 abbeys, with 499 members, in Austria; 9 in Italy, several of which have since been suppressed by the Sardinian government; 3 in Switzerland, of which one has since been suppressed; 1 in Belgium; and 1 in Poland. Since then they have re-established themselves also in England, at St. Susan's, Lullworth, and Mount St. Bernard, in Leicestershire. Several other monastic organizations owe their origin directly or indirectly to the Cistercians. The Templars received their rule from St. Bernard of Clairvaux. The Spanish knights of Calatrava, Alcantara, and Montesa, and the Portuguese of Avis and Christ, were affiliated to the Cistercians. The Feuillants took their origin in 1574 in the reformed Cistercian abbey of Feuillans, near Toulouse. The austerest congregation that sprung from them are the Trappists, founded in 1662. See Fehr, Geschichte der Mönchsorden, i, 90 sq.; A concise History of the Cistercian Order (London, 1852, sm. 8vo); Maillard, Dark Ages, p. 358; Luard, Annales Monastici, vols. i, ii (Lond. 1864, 1865); Christian Remembrancer, July, 1867, art. i. See TRAPPISTS.

CISTERCIAN NUNS (Bernardines), a religious order founded in 1120 by abbot Stephen of Citeaux for the convent of Tarb. They followed the rule of Citeaux under the superintendence of the abbot general of the Cistercians. Later, they were frequently subjected to the jurisdiction of the bishops. Their habit was white, with a black veil, scapular, and girdle. They gradually amassed immense riches, and numbered as many as 6000 convents. In Germany some of the abbesses were raised to the dignity of princesses of the empire, and remained so until 1803. Among all their convents, that of Port Royal (q. v.), in France, became the most celebrated. Only a few convents are left, viz. in Switzerland (which has now by far the largest number), in Italy, Bavaria, Saxony, and France. See TRAPPISTS.

Cistercian Monk and Nun.

Cistern (בּאֵר or בּוֹר, bor', from בָּאַר, to dig or bore, Gesenius, Thes. Heb. p. 176; Sept. usually λάκκος; Vulg. cisterna or lacus; A. V. generally "pool"), a receptacle for water, either conducted from an external spring, or proceeding from rain-fall (Jer. ii, 13; Prov. v, 15; Eccles. xii, 6; Jer. xxxvi, 16; a pit, as often rendered; the mod. Arab. birkeh). Thus the cistern is essentially distinguished from the living spring עַיִן, a'yin; but from the well בְּאֵר, beër', only in the fact that beër is almost always used to denote a place ordinarily containing water rising on the spot, while בּוֹר, bor, is often used for a dry pit, or one that may be left dry at pleasure (Stanley, Palest. p. 512, 514). See AIN. But the pit into which Joseph was cast by his brethren (Gen. xxxvii, 24) was a beër or dry well (Thomson, Land and Book, i, 442).

The dryness of the summer months between May and September in Syria, and the scarcity of springs in many parts of the country, make it necessary to collect in reservoirs and cisterns the rain-water, of which an abundance falls in the intermediate period (Shaw, Travels, p. 335; Jerome, quoted by Harmer, i, 148; Robinson, ii, 98; Kitto, Phys. Geogr. of Palest. p. 302, 303). See WELL. Hence the frequent mention of cisterns in Scripture, and more especially of those which are found in the open country. These were, it seems, the property of those by whom they were formed (Num. xxi, 22). They are usually little more than large pits (see Eccles. i, 3), but sometimes take the character of extensive subterraneous vaults, open only by a small mouth, like that of a well. They are filled with rain-water, and (where the climate allows) with snow during winter, and are then closed at the mouth with large flat stones, over which sand is spread in such a way as to prevent their being easily discovered (comp. the "sealed fountain" of Cant. iv, 12). If by any chance the waters which the shepherd has thus treasured up are lost by means of an earthquake or some other casualty, or are stolen, both he and his flocks are exposed to great and imminent danger, as are also travellers who hasten to a cistern and find its waters gone (comp. Judith vii, 21). For this reason a failure of water is used as the image of any great calamity (Isa. xli, 17, 18; xliv, 3). There is usually a large deposit of mud at the bottom of these cisterns, so that he who falls into them, even when they are without water, is liable to perish miserably (Gen. xxxvii, 22 sq.; Jer. xxxviii, 6; Lam. iii, 53; Psa. xl, 2; lxix, 15). In cities the cisterns were works of much labor, for they were either hewn in the rocks or surrounded with subterraneous walls, and lined with a fine incrustation. See BETHESDA. The system which in this respect formerly prevailed in Palestine is doubtless the same that exists at present; and indeed there is every probability that most of the cisterns now in use were constructed in very ancient times. Dr. Robinson assures us that "the main dependence of Jerusalem at the present day is on its cisterns; and this has probably always been the case" (Researches, i, 480). Both large and small cisterns are frequent throughout the whole of Syria and Palæ-

With respect to the shape of the cithern or cithara mentioned in the Apocrypha, the opinion of the learned is divided: according to some, it resembled in form the Greek delta, Δ; others represent it as a half-moon; and others, again, like the modern guitar. In many Eastern countries it is still in use with strings, varying in number from three to twenty-four. Under the name of Koothir, travellers describe it as a wooden plate or dish, with a hole beneath, and a piece of skin stretched above like a drum. Two sticks, joined after the manner of a fan, pass through the skin at the end, and where the two sticks stand apart, they are connected by a transversal piece of wood. From the upper end of this wooden triangle to the point below are fastened five chords, which, at a little distance above their junction, pass over a bridge, like the strings of a violin. The chords are made to vibrate by means of a leather thong fastened to one of the lateral sticks of the triangle (see Mendelssohn's edition of the Psalms, 2d Pref.).

Modern Oriental Cithara.

The cithara, if it be not the same with, resembles very closely the instruments mentioned in the book of Psalms, under the denominations of כִּנּוֹר, נֵבֶל, נֵגִינָה, respectively rendered in the A. V. "harp," "psaltery," "organ." In Chaldee, cithara is transferred as קָתְרוֹס, the Keri for קִיתָרוֹס (Dan. iii, 5), in the A. V. rendered "harp," and the same Engl. word is employed instead of cithern (1 Macc. iv, 54) in Robert Barker's edition of the English Bible (London, 1615). Gesenius (Thes. Heb. p. 215) considers cithara as the same with harp; but Luther translates κιθάραις by mit Pfeifen, "with pipes."—Smith, s. v. See HARP.

Cities. See CITY.

Cit'im (Κιτιεῖοι v. r. Κιτιαῖοι, Vulg. Cetei, A. V. "Citims"), a nation whose king Perseus is mentioned (1 Macc. viii, 5) as having been defeated by the Romans; evidently the CHITTIM (q. v.), or Macedonians.

Citizenship, the rights and privileges of a native or adopted citizen (πολίτης, 2 Macc. iv, 50; v, 6; ix, 15, 19; Luke xv, 15; xix, 14; Acts xxi, 39), in distinction from a foreigner. The following account is in part taken from Kitto and Smith, s. v. See ALIEN.

I. Hebrew.—Under the Mosaic constitution, which was framed on a basis of religious rather than of political privileges and distinctions, the idea of the commonwealth (πολιτεία, Eph. ii, 12) was merged in that of the congregation, to which every Hebrew, and even strangers under certain restrictions, were admitted. See CONGREGATION. Strict isolation did by no means, as some suppose, form the leading principle in the system of theocracy as laid down by Moses, since even non-Israelites, under various names [see STRANGER], not only were allowed to reside in Palestine, but had the fullest protection of the law equally with the native Israelites (Exod. xii, 19; Lev. xxiv, 22; Num. xv, 15; xxxv, 15; Deut. i, 16; xxiv, 17: the law of usury, Deut. xxiii, 20, made, however, an exception), and were, besides, recommended in general terms by Moses to humanity and charity (Exod. xxii, 21; xxiii, 9; Lev. xix, 33, 34; Deut. x, 18; comp. Jer. vii, 6; Mal. iii, 5; see Josephus, Apion, ii, 28), as well as to a participation in certain prerogatives granted to the poor of the land, such as a share in the tithe and feast-offering, and the harvest in the jubilee-year (Deut. xiv, 29; xvi, 10, 14; xxvi, 11; Lev. xxv, 6). In return, it was required on the part of non-Israelites not to commit acts by which the religious feelings of the people might be hurt (Exod. xx, 10; Lev. xvii, 10; xviii, 26; xx, 2; xxiv, 16; Deut. v, 14. The eating of an animal which had died a natural death, Deut. xiv, 21, seems to have been the sole exception). The advantage the Jew had over the Gentile was thus strictly spiritual, in his being a citizen, a member of the theocracy (the קְהַל יְהוָה, community of Jehovah, Num. xvi, 3; Deut. xxiii, 2), on whom positive laws were enjoined. But even to this spiritual privilege Gentiles were admitted under certain restrictions (Deut. xxiii, 1-9); thus we find among the Israelites, Doeg, an Edomite (1 Sam. xxi, 8), as also Uriah, a Hittite (a Canaanite). The only nations that were altogether excluded from the citizenship of the theocracy by especial command of the Lord were the Ammonites and Moabites, from a feeling of vengeance against them; and in the same situation were all castrated persons and bastards, from a feeling of disgrace and shame (Deut. xxiii, 1-6). In the time of Solomon no less than 153,600 strangers were resident in Palestine (2 Chron. ii, 17). See GENTILE.

II. Roman.—The right of citizenship (πολιτεία, "freedom," Acts xxii, 28, i. e. to be considered as equal to natives of the city of Rome, jus civitatis, civitas) was granted in the times of the emperors to whole provinces and cities (Dio Cass. xli, 25; Suet. Aug. 47), as also to single individuals (Tacit. Annal. i, 58; Sueton. Nero, 12; Dio Cass. xliii, 39; Appian, Civ. iii, 26), for some service rendered to the state (Cic. Balb. 22) or the imperial family (Sueton. Aug. 47), sometimes through mere favor (Tacit. Hist. iii, 41), or even for a certain sum of money (Acts xxii, 28; Dio Cass. xli, 24; see Heinecc. Antiq. jur. Rom. i, 1, 11 sq.). The apostle Paul was a Roman citizen (civis natus, Sueton. Calig. 38; see Amtzen, De civitate Rom. apost. Pauli, Utr. 1725) by family (Acts, l. c.) [see TARSUS], and hence his protesting against corporal or capital punishment (Acts xvi, 37; comp. Cic. Verr. v, 57, 65; Euseb. Hist. Eccles. v, 1, etc.). It appears from a variety of passages in the classic writers that a Roman citizen could not legally be scourged (virgis or flagellis cædi); this punishment being deemed to the last degree dishonorable, and the most daring indignity and insult upon the Roman name. Such was the famous "Porcia Lex." "A Roman citizen, judges," exclaims Cicero, in his oration against Verres, "was publicly beaten with rods in the forum of Messina; during this public dishonor, no groan, no other expression of the unhappy wretch was heard amid the cruelties he suffered, and the sound of the strokes that were inflicted, but this: 'I am a Roman citizen!'" Neither was it lawful for a Roman citizen to be bound, or to be examined by the question, or torture, to extort a confession from him. These punishments were deemed servile; torture was only inflicted upon slaves; freemen were exempted from this inhumanity and ignominy. The right once obtained descended to a man's children (Acts xxii, 28; see Zimmern, Gesch. des röm. Privat. rechts, I, ii, 441). The Jews had rendered signal services to Julius Cæsar in the Egyptian war (Josephus, Ant. xiv, 8, 1 and 2), and it is not improbable that many obtained the freedom of the city on that ground; certain it is that great numbers of Jews who were Roman citizens were scattered over Greece and Asia Minor (Ant. xiv, 10, 13 and 14). Among the privileges attached to citizenship, the most noteworthy was the above, that a man could not be bound or imprisoned without a formal trial (Acts xx, 29), still less be scourged (Acts xvi, 37; Cic. Verr. v, 63, 66); the simple assertion of citizenship was sufficient to deter a magistrate from such a step (Acts xxii, 25; Cic. Verr. v, 62), as any infringement of the privilege was visited with severe punishment. A Jew could only plead exemption from such treatment before a Roman magistrate; he was still liable to it from Jewish authorities (2 Cor. xi, 24; Selden, Syn. ii, 15, § 11). Another privilege attaching to citizenship was the appeal from a provincial tribunal to the emperor at Rome (Acts xxv, 11). See APPEAL. The rights of the Roman citizen included several other important privileges: he had a full right over his property, his children, and his dependents; he had a voice in the assemblies of the people, and in the election of magistrates; and his testament had full authority after his death. See Smith's Dict. of Class. Antiq. s. v. Civitas; Sigon. De antiquo jure civ. Romn. (Par. 1572; Hal. 1715; also in Grævii Thesaur. i); Spanheim, Orbis Rom. (London, 1703; Hal. 1728); Cellarii Dissertatt. p. 715 sq.; also Büttner, De civ. Rom. virgidemiis exempt. (Jen. 1672); Lange, De immunitate civ. Roman. (Hafn. 1710). See FREEMAN.

Citron (κίτριον, the tree is κιτρία or κιτρέα, but was long without a special name among the Greeks, although they were well acquainted with it; see Smith, Dict. of Class. Antiq. s. v. Citrus). In his account of Alexander Jannæus, Josephus tells us, "His own people were seditious against him; for at a festival which was then celebrated, when he stood upon the altar and was going to sacrifice, the nation rose upon him, and pelted him with citrons, for the law of the Jews required that at the festival of tabernacles every one should have branches of the palm-tree and citron-tree"

Citron Flower and Fruit.

(Ant. xiii, 13, 5). The late Lady Callcott, in her Scripture Herbal, mentions that, as the modern Jews still use citrons at the feast of tabernacles, "in London considerable sums of money are expended in importing them of the best kind for the purpose. They must be without blemish, and the stalk must still adhere to them. After the feast is over, the citrons are openly sold, and the money produced by the sale is placed in the common treasury, as part of the provision for the poor of the congregation." Their anxiety to obtain them with the stalk still adhering is no doubt a faint effort to secure the "thick" branches and "boughs of goodly trees" required for that festival (Lev. xxxiii, 40). But the chief importance of this fruit is its supposed identity with the תַּפּוּחַ, tappu'ach, or "apple" of the Bible, a conclusion, however, which has been ably disputed. See APPLE. The citron, or Citrus medica—so called because it was from Media that the Romans first received it—belongs to the natural order of Auruntiaceæ, a delightful group, including the orange, the lime, the lemon, and the shaddock (see the Penny Cyclopædia, s. v. Citrus). With its dark, glossy, laurel-looking leaves, its evergreen branches, often bearing simultaneously ripe fruits and newly-opened flowers, and thus vouchsafing to the pilgrim who rests in its deep shadow the twofold refreshment of a delicious banquet and a fragrant breeze, the citron may well claim pre-eminence "among the trees of the wood" (Can. ii, 3). Abounding in malic and citric acid, the juice of the orange and its congeners is one of the most agreeable antidotes which the Creator's bounty has provided against the exhausting thirst and incipient fever of sultry climes. A settler in the torrid swamps of the Amazon will devour a dozen oranges before his morning meal (Voyage up the Amazon, in the "Home and Colonial Library"), and in tropical regions such acidulous fruits are invaluable on account of their anti-febrile virtues. These were doubtless well known to the Hebrews, and, in common with all antiquity, they greatly prized the pleasant pungent odor emitted by the rind. Macrobius speaks of "citrosa vestis," showing that it was usual to keep citrons in wardrobes for the sake of their perfume; and, like the modern Oriental ladies, whose favorite vinaigrette is a citron, in England two or three centuries ago an orange was so commonly used as a scent-bottle that it may often be seen in old pictures of their queens and peeresses. It was also believed to have a disinfecting potency; and during the plague of London, people walked the streets smelling at oranges. Understood as belonging to this beautiful family, there is a peculiar felicity in the comparison, "A word fitly spoken is like citrons of gold in salvers (or baskets) of silver" (Prov. xxv, 11). The famous golden apples which grew in the gardens of the Hesperides were unquestionably either citrons or oranges.—Fairbairn, s. v. Apple. See BOTANY.

City. The Heb. term most frequently thus rendered is עִיר (ir, literally something raised up, i. e. having walls reared; or from עוּר, to keep guard [Gesenius, Thes. Heb. p. 1004]; Sept. and N. T. πόλις), a word of very extensive signification, embracing not only the idea of an encampment, as a nomade hamlet (Gen. iv, 17), but also that of small fortifications, as watch-posts or watch-towers (comp. Numb. xiii, 19; 2 Kings xvii, 9; Isa. i, 8), and thence extended to regular towns. Nearly equivalent to this is קִרְיָה (kiryah'), which, with a few exceptions (Deut. ii, 36; 1 Kings i, 41, 45), is found only in the poetic style; and analogous (in sense, as probably also in derivation) to this
